

STATE VETERINARIANS MEET IN PULLMAN

Lively Discussions of Veterinary Topics Mark Annual Session of Practitioners and Instructors

Twenty-five practicing veterinarians and veterinary instructors assembled at the State College on Monday and Tuesday of this week for the annual meeting of the Washington State Veterinary Medical Society. The session has been marked by lively and highly educational discussions of subjects of interest not only to the veterinarians themselves but to the livestock interests of the Northwest as well, and several conclusions have been drawn that mean much to the stockman and farmer.

The first session was called to order by President E. E. Wegner of Pullman Monday morning. In his address to the visitors Dr. Wegner urged the necessity of more thorough work in his own particular field by each veterinarian and less inclination on the part of the practitioner to enlarge that field. He called attention to the fact that as graduate veterinarians go into the field the scope of territory available to each man will be lessened rather than increased, but contended that if each man will cover his field more thoroughly, take an active and leading interest in the development of the live stock interests of his own community and get closer in touch with the farmers and stock men of that community, he will have all the work he can handle.

Dr. R. J. Donohue, deputy dairy and live stock commissioner, dealt with the interest a veterinarian should take in his community and in developing the live stock industry. "Strawstack poison," a fungous poison which affects live stock in all parts of the Northwest, was discussed by Dr. G. A. Unbewust of Harrington and others of the veterinarians. The discussion brought out the fact that while slight advancement has been made in the matter of preventing and combating the disease in recent years, much remains to be done along this line. Each veterinarian was urged to give the matter attention and to work diligently toward a solution of the problem.

Sheep a Future Factor in Live Stock Industry

That the sheep is finally coming into its own in the Northwest and will hereafter be a prominent factor in the practice of the veterinarians was the contention of Dr. E. T. Baker of Moscow at the session of the association Monday afternoon. The increasing value of sheep and their more general use on Northwest farms will give them place in the live stock industry of the Northwest and the veterinarians must place themselves in a position to handle sheep diseases as efficiently as diseases of other live stock. Dr. Baker outlined poisons and contagious diseases peculiar to sheep and suggested a classification of sheep diseases to make a diagnosis easier.

A discussion of tuberculosis, as well as other common chick diseases, contagious and non-contagious, was led by Dr. B. T. Simms of the Oregon Agricultural College.

An address on the relationship of the county agricultural agent and veterinary practitioner by Dr. A. R. Hahner, county agent of Stevens county, developed a lively discussion on the duties of the county agent. While there is a vast difference in the work the veterinarian and agriculturist must do, the veterinarians concluded that closer co-operation between the two would prove mutually beneficial as well as beneficial to the community.

Dr. A. C. Brown of Vancouver, Wash., was absent, but his paper on "Fern Stagers" was read and was followed by a discussion by Dr. Carl Cozier of Bellingham. The discussion brought out the fact that the fern is probably responsible for similar trouble in other parts of the State than typical fern districts but is not so diagnosed.

Monday evening the visiting veterinarians were guests at a banquet in honor of the Graystone Inn. Dr. S. B. Nelson, head of the veterinary department at W. S. C., was toastmaster. Several visitors responded.

Municipal Inspection

Municipal inspection of all meats not otherwise inspected and municipal testing of all dairy cows or forced pasteurization of all milk dispensed in the municipality was advocated by Dr. R. A. Button, meat and milk inspector for the city of Tacoma, before the veterinarians Tuesday. Many improvements are needed in the present systems of municipal inspection of meat and milk, according to Dr. Button, who dwelt upon the great importance of the work from the standpoint of both the producer and the consumer.

A new method of treatment for "roaring" in horses, a paralysis of the vocal cords, was advanced by Dr. C. A. Jones of North Yakima, who has used a treatment which includes the burning of the affected parts of the throat with good success. The burning is preceded by an operation on the throat. Dr. Jones recited a number of interesting cases of the disease which has been cured by this method. A number of possible new causes for the disease were brought out by the speaker, who mentioned poisoning as a probable cause which has not heretofore been accepted.

A general discussion of influenza in live stock followed the address by Dr. A. E. Clark of Tekoa. Dr. Clark brought out a number of different phases of the treatment for the disease.

The general pathological exhibit and lecture by Dr. J. W. Kalkus of the veterinary staff of the State College was highly appreciated by the practitioners.

Clinic operations by practitioners featured the sessions of the association Tuesday afternoon. A demonstrative operation for poll evil in the horse was given by Dr. Robert Pryor of North Yakima. Dr. Taylor of Condon, operated for paraphimosis, and Dr. R. A. Button of Tacoma for fistulous withers in a horse. Causes of sterility in cows were demonstrated by Dr. B. T. Simms of O. A. C.

The association adjourned Wednesday morning following the annual election of officers. The following veterinarians were named to have charge of the affairs of the association during the coming year:

President—Dr. L. C. Pelton, Seattle.

Vice president—Dr. C. A. Jones, North Yakima.

Secretary-treasurer—Dr. Carl Cozier, Bellingham.

Tentative arrangements for the holding of the next annual convention are to hold joint sessions with the Oregon State Veterinary association at Portland during the Rose Festival next spring. This point, however, has not been definitely decided, final arrangements for the meeting place being left in the hands of the officers.

Clinic operations Wednesday morning included the removal of the eye of a horse by Dr. George O. Jones of Sedro-Woolley, and a pyroptoid operation on a horse.

SUMMER SCHEDULE OF UNION SERVICES

At a meeting of the city pastors on Wednesday an arrangement was made for union services during the summer months. The following schedule of dates, places of service and ministers in charge has been arranged:

Sept. 9—M. E. church, Rev. C. H. Harrison.

During the month of August there will be one union service each Sabbath morning and no evening service. The several churches will make their own arrangements as to Bible schools and Young People's meetings for the month. All the union meetings of the month for public worship will be held at 11:00 a. m. at the M. E. church.

On August 5 Dr. Spalding will have charge.

On August 12 Rev. Robinson will have charge.

On August 19 Rev. Caughlan will have charge.

On August 24 Rev. Harrison will have charge.

The members of the several churches will bring their offerings in their own church envelopes which will be taken care of by the several treasurers. The loose offering will constitute a fund for the ministerial alliance, to be used for needed charitable work at the discretion of the alliance.

The Ministers' alliance is hopeful that this union summer schedule and effort may have the enthusiastic support of all the members of all the churches. And we must cordially invite the attendance of all the people of the community.
