MRS. FLORA A. CAMPBELL

CALLED BY DEATH

Was Daughter of the Rev. Jeremiah Kenoyer, a Pioneer Missionary of the Pacific Northwest

Mrs. Flora A. Campbell, aged 74, a pioneer of the Northwest, died at her home in Albion Friday afternoon. Mrs. Campbell was the daughter of the Rev. Jeremiah Kenoyer, who came to the Wallamette valley in 1853 and 14 years later moved to Walla Walla, where he was closely allied with Doctors Whitman and Spalding. Deceased was born November 2, 1846, in Indiana. Her father being a missionary, they left Indiana when she was two years old, moving to Wisconsin, where they remained for five years when they went to Oregon and settled in the Umpqua valley.

February 1, 1863, she was married to D. E. Tower and to their union nine children were born, three of whom are living. Two were born in Oregon and the rest at Walla Walla, where they lived until the death of Mr. Tower, May 10, 1879. She remained a widow until November, 1887, when she was married to W. R. Bartlett. They lived at Cheney that winter, then moved to Spokane and later to Philomath, Oregon, where a son, W. R. Bartlett Jr., was born. They spent two years there and then moved back to Walla Walla for a few months, then to Leland, Idaho, where they resided until the death of Mr. Bartlett. She came back to her father at Albion and was married to R. M. Campbell in 1903. They made their home at Albion until his death in May, 1916, after which she has resided with her daughter, Mrs. Starry, at Walla Walla and Chewelah until she came to visit relatives at Albion in June and passed away there. The funeral was held at the United Brethren church last Sunday, the Rev. I. R. Hughey officiating. Interment was in the Albion cemetery.

REV. LAW ADVOCATES INTER-CHURCH COUNCIL

At the union meeting of the churches last Sunday evening Rev. J. G. Law was the speaker. Following is an abstract of his address:

One of the most imperative social needs of the city of Pullman is the organization of an inter-church council, not to grasp at the reins of public affairs but to be of mutual assistance in rendering service to the community along lines some of which are, clear.

It should be clear that this would be but a small step in church union. The great item in church union is not an organization but the far more important and vastly more weighty points of unity of spirit and of effort. Here is a sense in which the churches should be united. In another sense they should not. They should unite in so far as they are actually akin. For instance protestants and Mormons should not unite. Such a union would mean to give up most vital truths and to subscribe to most vital errors. But there are community services in which they might unite.

So in Pullman there are matters upon which the churches can unite and there are others upon which the union can be but partial, or not at all. I would not unite on any church program which would exclude evangelism, or the preaching of the deity of Jesus. I could not unite with the Roman Catholic minister in allegiance to the Pope, I could on a boys' program. So any church council can be of use so far as we actually desire the same things with the privilege and courtesy extended to any church to draw the line on its own basis.

Among Protestant evangelicals the great steps toward union have already been made in unity of spirit, ideal and purpose. An organized expression of this union would be a great step. What, then, could we do together?

1. We could unite on the supreme program of religious education and social life for the children of Pullman. The community realizes the value of religious education. Practically all the children are given us for training. But we are but beginning to realize upon the opportunities for good.

In social life the demand is equally great. The Christian life demands a distinct type of social life. It requires that pleasure be the recreation of a busy life, that it be wholesome and conducive to clean living and clean companionship, that it shall lead to the subjugation of the appetites, not to enraging them. Social life ought to be a helpful part of the Christian life. The church can turn over to the schools its educational work by supplementing the efforts of the schools. But there is no such organization to which it can trust its social life. The church has as its distinct purpose the production of individuals who shall find their fullest expression in the finest social living. In the production of such lives the fellowship of Jesus Christ is the foundation hence the church can be content only when its social life is in fellowship with Him.

2. Our approach to the young people of the college should be one in which the Christian young people are united. No greater opportunity lies before any community than this. We can come into court with a case proven. What we need is not education but Christian education but we shall never have this till we have a group within the student body more conscious of themselves as a united Christian body.

3. We need a sustained and desperate campaign for saving the American Sunday. The very foundations of our nation's life depend upon our using Sunday as Almighty God has commanded to develop social and moral ideals.

4. We must command the movies. Within the last short while the two great movie ideals have both featured in divorce scandals. Yet we can make the movies a mighty community uplift. We shall not attempt to say all that shall be shown but we shall fight till commercial greed does not dominate and until like the schools their aim is wholesome. In any degree in which this is now true let it be recognized.

5. We need a united campaign to train our own people in the immense value of church going on Sunday evening. The war has shown us the unthinkable need of training in the teachings of Jesus. The church must have more time to render this service, not to tickle the sated appetites of movie fans but to teach earnest minds the word of God.

6. We need a united effort to deepen the spiritual life of the churches. We are taught that only that spirit can cleanse the heart from its passion and greed. Surely then that is a supreme social service.

Many of the churches are now a unit in respect to the great ideals of the Christian Kingdom vision. But union in a militant organization would make them more conscious of each other and more effective in service.
