

BULLIED THE BULLIES.

How Andrew Jackson Suppressed Three Outlaws.

The Duel of That Famous Man With Sevier—Henry Clay's Wonderful Memory.

New York Herald: On the records of the court of Sumner county, Tennessee, for the year 1796 there is this entry: "The court thanks Andrew Jackson for his brave conduct."

There is no information concerning what Mr. Jackson had done to deserve thanks in this form, at least at the court in question. "Old Joe Guild," a prominent lawyer and state character, who died a few years ago, removed from that county to Nashville. He used to relate that when he grew up and became a Jackson man that there were still magistrates living of the 1795 period. Of them he inquired concerning this entry. It seems that the county court had the trial of misdemeanors. A gang of bullies defied the court, juror and sheriff and persisted in terrifying the surrounding country. They were indicted by the grand jury, but came into court and declared that they would not be tried; that it was against the laws of nature which governed the conduct of gentlemen and protected them from such indignified prosecution. By the next term of court Jackson had been chosen district attorney. On his arrival he hitched his horse, carried his saddle-bags into court and placed them beside him while he perused the docket. The first thing he did, to the amusement of every one, was to call the bullies. The entire gang came into court and declined to be tried, repeating their accustomed argument. Mr. Jackson remonstrated and assured them that there was no way to avoid a trial; that the law must be obeyed no matter whom it hurt; that it was no respecter of persons. The bullies became boisterous and threatening. Instantly Mr. Jackson pulled his pistols from his saddle-bags and a free fight began in the court-room. The leadership of the young lawyer inspired the people present, who were in favor of the enforcement of the law, and they joined with Jackson, whipped the entire crowd of bullies, took them into court, where they were tried, convicted and sentenced to the full penalty prescribed by the statute. That was the last of the bullies and the occasion of the unexplained entry on the records of the court of Sumner county for 1796.

Samuel B. Morgan, who built the state capitol of Tennessee, died some ten years ago. He had in his possession a merchant's books of account. In these were the purchases of Andrew Jackson for five years after 1790. An examination of the books shows that the only purchases made by Old Hickory of this merchant were powder, lead and whisky.

Mr. Morgan used to relate that he once witnessed a cock fight shortly after the battle of New Orleans. Jackson was present, sitting on his horse, while some fellow down in the pit awkwardly tried to heel the chicken. Jackson first became uneasy, then mad. He leaped from his horse into the pit, brushed the fellow aside and heeled the chicken after the most approved fashion. Then he returned to the saddle and witnessed the fight.

JACKSON A NATURAL GENTLEMAN. Jackson was originally a backwoods specimen of the average type, but he at once evolved into perhaps the grandest man that ever lived, having no equal in the ball-room, no peer in his politeness, courtesy and admiration for women. The same is largely true of the Tennesseean of today. Take him from the farm, array him in fashionable clothes, put him in the ball-room or in society, and his thoroughbred blood instantly manifests itself, exhibiting in him only the refined man of the world. Jackson's letters, which remain, are in many respects more interesting than Washington's. They exhibit a man absolutely devoted to his family, from whom not the smallest thing concerning them escaped, and whose every interest was his. No man ever wrote in the same spirit, and from his social letters Chesterfield might have learned much in politeness. Nothing escaped him. To show how the man of his time worshipped him, the incident related by Willoughby Williams, "Old Man Willoughby," of years ago, will suffice. When Lafayette visited Jackson in 1825, he rode in a carriage with General Hall, while Jackson was on horseback. Great a man as Lafayette was, the people all looked at Jackson and confined their expressions of admiration to him.

HIS DUEL WITH SEVIER. The duel between Jackson and Sevier seems to have escaped history and biography. Sevier was Jackson's equal as a soldier, and during his Indian fights of over a quarter of a century he never lost a battle, because he always charged into the natives when in a body, and the Indian could only fight with a tree in front of him. In 1796 Sevier was the first governor of Tennessee, and for twelve years. During his first term Jackson was on the supreme bench of the state. The two men had a difficulty about a military election, both being candidates. On the day when Jackson arrived at Knoxville to hold court Sevier came also, mounted a block in the square and denounced Jackson in unmeasured terms, calling him all the names in the early vocabulary. There could be but one result, and that evening Jackson challenged him. Sevier accepted, and then came a question as to where the fight should take place. Jackson wanted to fight on the Cherokee reservation and Sevier in Virginia. As a result letters passed between them in which the word coward had the most frequent use. Finally Jackson started for Virginia and notified Sevier. He reached Virginia first and remained several days awaiting the arrival of his opponent. Sevier not appearing, he started for home, meeting his rival on the way. They met in the road, exchanged several shots, neither one being hurt, when friends interfered. The never forgave each other, and there is still a tradition that this was the most disgraceful episode in the history of the state.

HENRY CLAY AND THE TOUGH.

Henry Clay once invaded the blue grass region of Tennessee to make a speech. When he arrived at his destination a tough looking specimen, evidently in the last stages of whiskyism, stepped from the throne, slapped the great orator on the back and said in southern vernacular:

"Howdy, Mr. Clay?" The great man shook his head and replied: "Be kind enough to turn your head that I may see your profile."

The man averted his face while the flickering torchlight enabled the observer to study him closely for several seconds. "Twenty years ago," said Mr. Clay, "you had not begun to grow that long beard and was smooth faced—eh?"

"That's right."

"You were not then a cyclops, but had two whole eyes—eh?"

"That's right, I reckon."

"Ah! Then you sat on a jury before which I pleaded a case, and your name is—Am I not right?"

"I reckon you are, suah."

"Yes, yes; I remember you perfectly suah," continued Mr. Clay, "you had on other characteristic, which I now recall—you were then a gentleman."

An Expensive Find.

"Joe Whilkens! what's that?" His gins made a dive for something in the mud at his feet, fished it out between his thumb and finger, and slapped his thigh joyfully, as he said: "A five dollar gold piece, sure as guns! First money I ever found in my life! I'll have me a new hat out of that, and take the babies home some toys and something to my wife!"

A moment later he met two friends and said:

"Ha, Smythe, how are you? How are you, Haley? S'posing we step into Archibald Fynn's place and take something. I've just found five dollars, and I'll set 'em up on the strength of it."

What he "set up" cost eighty cents and ten minutes later he met three of the "boys" from the office and generously "set up" cigars all 'round.

Then he tossed twenty-five cents to a blind beggar and gave the office boy ten cents for blacking his boots.

He wrote a letter to his married sister that morning, to which there was the following postscript:

"I picked up five dollars on the street to-day and inclose two of it, with which you may get the children something from Uncle Henry."

"Guess I'll go down to the Parker House and get my dinner to-day instead of to the lunch counter 'round the corner," he said at noon. "I can afford something extra to-day."

Then he paid a dollar and a half for a new straw hat, spent a dollar for toys for the children, and another dollar for a vase for his wife.

"By Jove!" he said, as he was passing a theatre, "my wife's been wanting all the week to go and see Lotta, and I said we couldn't afford it; but hanged if you can't when a fellow picks five dollar gold pieces up out of the mud!"

A day or two later Higgins found rather sober amusement in covering a sheet of paper with the following figures:

"Things bought with five dollars I found Wednesday—hat, dollar and a half; theatre tickets, two dollars; cigars for boys fifty cents; drinks for boys, eighty cents; beggar, twenty-five cents; office boy, ten cents; sister Nell, two dollars; dinner at Parker's, dollar and a half; toys for children, a dollar; vase for wife, a dollar; box early strawberries, fifty cents; necktie, dollar and a half; new cape, ninety cents; pound candy, forty cents; gloves, dollar and a half; gave wife one dollar and a half; total, sixteen dollars and ninety-five cents."

"If I'd found twenty dollars I'd have gone into bankruptcy, hanged if I wouldn't," he said, as he turned to one of the boys and borrowed a dollar to last him until Saturday.—Time.

Switching Baltimore Girls.

One of the latest fads of Baltimore girls says the American, is to dress in black from head to foot, with veil and gloves to match, and then, borrowing a neighbor's child, show it around the city. Of course the natural supposition is that the child is not borrowed and that the young lady is a widow. As a widow is generally supposed to be ready to recontract matrimony, the sympathies of the susceptible young man are quite readily aroused, first curiosity as to how long the child's father has been dead, then, what he died of, and, since the widow seems to mourn for him, how she must have cared for the dear departed. And, if she did care for him, why might she not care also for another, and why might not he be the fortunate individual, especially if the first husband left cash enough for the support of two, or three, as the case might be. Of course, when acquaintance follows, the apparent widowhood can be easily and innocently explained, and the desired happy result followed.
