Wonder if the physicians didn't have a hand in framing that new marriage license law. Looks that way.

The lumber manufacturers, if their tale is to be believed, are running their plants at a dead loss just to give the poor working men a job! Oh, rats!

The greatest good that the coming legislative session can do is to transact their business promptly and adjourn and give the people of the state a rest. We have had about all the fool legislation we can stand in one year.

Over 100 attorneys in Seattle have signed a call for a meeting of the King County Bar association to draw up a petition to the legislature asking them to repeal the amendment to the direct primary law passed last winter which relegated the nomination of supreme court judges back to the old convention system. They realize the fact that under the old system of convention manipulation the corporations had the game in their own hands and could force the nomination of men favorable to corporate interests. There was no excuse for the legislature taking the action they did and if Gov. Hay was the champion of the people he would now have us believe he would have vetoed that obnoxious measure the moment it reached him. If any legislation is to be considered by the special session this primary amendment should be repealed. Enemies of the direct primary law will be right on the job. This is proven by the information recently given that an attempt would be made to again pass the bill which prohibited candidates for the legislature signing any pre-election pledges. The people have said they wanted a direct primary law. It depends upon their vigilance whether it is a reality or a farce. Only eternal vigilance will prevent us from waking up some fine morning to the fact that scheming politicians have taken all the meat out of the coconut and left the people holding the empty shell.

One often hears the remark that it is safer to elect a rich man to the United States senate than a poor one because the former, having made his pile is less susceptible to corruption from corporate sources. This is a fallacy. The rich man in the vast majority of cases is incapable of seeing the needs of the common people. His habits and associations have made him so. The chase of wealth in this age of frenzied finance obliterates sentiment and the sense of justice between man and man and sets the dollar above human needs and moral standards. The money man comes to weigh the things of life purely in a dollar and cents scale. He loses the true perspective of life and considers everything from a business standpoint. Nor can he if he would break loose the ties that bind him to his former associates in the money-getting whirl. He owes them too much and it is but natural that having helped ensconce him in his seat in the senate they should expect him to remember them in matters of legislation. And they are not disappointed. No, give us a man in humbler circumstances as our ideal representative. There are men of great brains who are of and for the people. Men with ability and training who might have become creatures of the trusts and in turn enriched by them but who have had strength of character enough to cast their lot with the common people and fight their battle against greed and corruption. They haven't amassed many dollars because it is not a lucrative business to oppose concentrated wealth. But such a man is apt to remain true to his ideals of right even in the U. S. senate. Such a man is Judge John E. Humphries of this state, whom the corporations fear and hate and the people respect. A man whose history as a practicing attorney in this commonwealth has been one unbroken battle for the legal rights of the poor and unfortunate. Hated by corporate wealth. So much so that the whole primary law was dealt a staggering blow by the last legislature to make it impossible that he could be nominated for a seat on the supreme bench of the state at the next election. No, we have no hesitancy in declaring that of the men in this state who aspire to the senatorial toga of Samuel Piles, Judge John E. Humphries stands as our choice for that honorable position. And we believe we voice the sentiments of the great majority of working men of this state.

Senators LaFollette of Wisconsin and Beveridge of Indiana are receiving a great deal of criticism just now through the columns of the daily papers for their stand on tariff legislation. As he recognized leaders of the insurgent republicans in the senate they are blamed for impeding the passage of the tariff bill and thus unduly prolonging the session. And as the uncertainty of tariff changes is "hurting business," lessers, LaFollette and Beveridge are a blame for the delay in the return of prosperity to the country because they and their followers chose to place obstructions in the way of Aldrich and his fellows. This is the way the papers explain their attitude towards these gentlemen. They recognize of course the ability and integrity of the gentlemen, etc., etc. But what is it that the insurgents are really guilty of doing? Trying to carry out the party declaration in the Chicago platform. That is their crime. They believe that when a party promulgates a platform and considers it good enough to go before the people for their suffrage, the party if placed in power should attempt to carry out the provisions in that platform. The stand-patters insinuate that the platform did not promise "tariff revision downward" in specific terms but simply promised to "revise the tariff." Despite this squirming the fact remains that the voters of the country did interpret the tariff clause in the Chicago platform to mean "revision downward" and that the platform makers at that time intended that it should be so interpreted for the very good reason that the country was demanding such action. And in the states of the middle west where the call for revision was loudest, the campaign orators shouted themselves red in the face over tariff reduction and the benefit it would bring to the country. Senator LaFollette believes that party pledges should be binding upon the party making them. Senator Aldrich and his crowd believe that party pledges are made to get votes. That is the difference between them. Which crowd commands your respect and admiration, the insurgents, who are true to what they believe to be the country's best interests, or the fellows who stick to "special interests?"
