GRANGE OPPORTUNITY.

Its Influence in Improving Conditions an Encouraging Sign.

The grange is fast becoming one of the greatest factors for the uplift of civilization that we have among us, remarks the Lewiston (Me.) Journal. That this powerful organization is using its great influence for the betterment of society is one of the most cheering signs of the times. Its latest stand on the question of retaining our prohibitory laws is the noblest action of its history in Maine and will do much toward strengthening the order in this state. There are also other fields in which it is capable of doing a great work. There are in every town many fine, cultured people who have not yet learned that the grange means more than the good time and frequent supper, which has been their narrow conception of the order, and therefore they have withheld from membership therein the talent, the strength and the influence that would accrue through their admission to the order. How to reach these people can be no better answered than through some local undertaking of real uplifting nature.

For example, in every community there is some local condition that can be improved, and here the grange can exercise a widespread influence. In many country villages the darkness of the streets in the evening is most distressing, and yet nothing is being done to remedy it. What a chance for grange meeting discussion, followed by a modest beginning toward some light! The grange treasury may furnish the nucleus of the undertaking and a grange committee assume the raising of a little money from many contributors. Why not?

The town common in many places is a veritable beauty spot, though sadly neglected. Take it up in the grange, arrange for a half day's rally, when every one shall meet on the town common and clean it up. Amazing what a score of enthusiastic workers can accomplish in a united half day. An old home day is a splendid thing for any country town to get into the habit of holding, and yet one has never been held in country towns simply because there has been no one to lead the way. The grange might well discuss for one evening the benefits to a town of a home coming occasion and take the first steps toward actual results by appointing a committee to see whether a step of this sort is not advisable. Such a start is almost certain to be followed by interest sufficient to make the event become a reality.

The country cemeteries have been often a topic of criticism in the press and magazines because of the ill kept and untidy condition that is sometimes permitted to prevail. Here the grange may lead toward worthy ends by inducing the setting apart of a day when the resting place of the dead shall be improved and beautified. Surely there can be no difficulty in any rural community enlisting public response in such a cause. If only there is some person or individual to take the lead. Why not the grange here? Here is a field of usefulness that as yet has only partially been worked. To make these matters a subject of discussion in a grange meeting will be certain to arouse a renewed interest and a larger attendance.
