JAPAN NOW TRAINS FOR TRADE WAR WITH U. S.

MADE IN JAPAN.

Already the Japanese are bringing linen from Ireland, manufacturing it into collars and cuffs and selling it in the United States, so cheap is their labor.

By Gilson Gardner.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 4.—Anyone who imagines the wily Jap is not preparing as carefully and comprehensively for the future trade war with the United States as he did for his military war with Russia should pinch himself and wake up.

The Japanese chambers of commerce have resolved in favor of establishing in foreign ports "commercial consuls." These officials would do what U. S. consuls are supposed to do, namely, take an active and intelligent part in fostering foreign markets.

The Japanese also plan to abolish the reciprocity agreements with several foreign nations, to lower the duties on all raw material entering Japan, and to increase the tariff wall against all manufactured goods, and the opening of a world's fair at Tokio.

So rapid are its cotton yarn and fabric industries advancing that it will be only a few years before Japan will be independent in these lines.

Cotton mills are being erected, not only to supply the great domestic consumption, but to reach out to the vast markets of China and India.

Since 1902 Japan has reduced the importations of cotton fabrics from $1,301,000 to $266,000 last year. The imports of ginned cotton in the same time increased from $34,000,000 to $35,000,000.

Already Japan has increased her sales of cotton manufactures to China to $14,000,000. This trade has been built up practically within the last seven years. Her chief cotton mills are paying dividends as high as 20 per cent.

It is predicted that it will no longer be necessary for Japan to buy rails in Pittsburg. The government iron foundry at Edamitsu, near Moji, has been greatly enlarged and also is being adapted to the manufacture of railway carriage iron and telegraph wire.
