

MAN the MASTER
By Jessie M Parllon

Mrs. Flanagan appeared in police court with her left eye painted an artistic Wedgwood blue. It had evidently been in the way of her husband's fist.

The jaunty culprit at the bar of justice seemed quite unconcerned. A bevy of admiring neighbors divided their attentions and remarks impartially between the two Flanagan's.

"Ah, let him go, your honor!" pleaded the wife. "Sure, he's given me worse than this a dozen times!"

The truth hidden in this incident is older than Methuselah by many years. It antedates civilization.

What peculiar quality is there in woman's love that leads her to take pride in the blows of the man that loves her? It is a reminiscence of the time when woman was a slave and a chattel?

Every Judge, every lawyer, and all who have to do with the courts know this phase of woman's nature. Ask the policeman on your beat what happens when an outsider interferes to protect a woman from her drunken husband's blows.

The Good Samaritan gets the worst of it every time, he will tell you. The angry husband and the doubly enraged wife will turn and rend him.

How are we to account for this except by designating it the tribute weak women pay to strength? To be sure, not every woman boasts of the fact that her husband beats her. There are some women who cannot imagine submitting to anything of the sort—no man would ever dream of striking them.

But man's mastery over woman may be shown in other ways than by administering more or less skillful uppercuts on the feminine countenance, and that is what man is bent on demonstrating when he strikes.

How often we hear intelligent, cultured women remark, "I would never dare to visit Mrs. Watered-stock. John would not allow it!" It is forever and always a prideful thing to a woman to know her husband is strong enough to dictate to her, even when she would rather face the world as a divorcee than submit to his arbitrary rulings.

This trait is a relic of the stone age, when primitive man, being the toughest of muscle, forced woman to do his bidding, and all the education and polish of the intervening centuries have not been able to eradicate it entirely.

BIG LABOR DANCE

Arrangements have been completed for the dance given by the Central Labor union next Thursday night at the Armory hall. An orchestra of 16 pieces has been secured. Judging from the advance sale of tickets the dance will be the largest in point of numbers ever held in the city.

FINDS GOLD IN ALLEY

SEATTLE, Feb. 10.—R. Davis, 45 years of age, a lineman employed by one of the local telephone companies, is under arrest at the city jail, held pending police investigation of his ownership of two pokes full of nuggets and gold bars worth, if genuine, about $1,000. Davis says he found the pokes of gold in an alley in the rear of the Hinckley building several weeks ago.

There are six large pieces of yellow metal and a poke about half full of nuggets, including a long nugget watch chain.

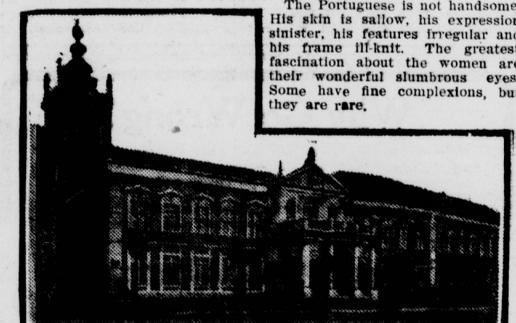

Lisbon, Quaint, Pretty and Lazy, Now Torn by Murder and Revolt

Special Correspondence to The Press. LISBON, Feb. 10.—Lisbon, capital of Portugal and center of world interest today, is one of the quaintest, most unique and interesting cities of all Europe. Withal it is one of the least known.

Here, if anywhere, are the Ely-ducted and unattractive. The currency is depreciated woefully. A premium of 50 per cent is paid upon gold, and for $50 in gold one gets a bale of dirty little bank notes, 800 of them of 100 reis each. Your gold doubles in value when you cross the frontier.

The Portuguese is not handsome. His skin is sallow, his expression sinister, his features irregular and his frame ill-knit. The greatest fascination about the women are their wonderful slumberous eyes. Some have fine complexions, but they are rare.

NECESSIDADES PALACE WHERE KING CARLOS AND CROWN PRINCE LUIS LAY IN STATE

Fields of the moderns, agitated beyond their usual wont just now by revolution and king murder. Brazilian palm trees ornament the public gardens and parks. Bananas grow in the heart of the city. The climate is ideal. The skies are ever blue, the air dry, the general atmosphere one of laziness. One can live for almost nothing.

At hotels of undoubted excellence the rates do not exceed $1 a day, and the menu will include a dinner and supper of six or eight courses, with dishes that are still luxuries in the United States, and a fine quality of native wine.

Lisbon is not a city particularly rich in antiquities. The great earthquake of 1755 settled that. But there are traces of two civilizations for all that, touching elbows as it were in the old and the new towns.

There are five public gardens, seven theaters, an opera house and a bull ring. There are two royal palaces, the Necessidades, where the former monarchs of the house of Braganza resided, and the Ajuda, on a hill above the aristocratic suburb of Belem. This is a huge palace in the Italian style, it was intended to be the largest palace in Europe, but was never completed.

Everywhere are the relics of a long dead glory. Scattered through the city are scores of "palaces," huge houses only partially occupied.

Of the churches, St. Vincent's is interesting in that it contains the confined remains of the monarchs of the house of Braganza. The cathedral of St. John the Baptist, scarcely more than a miniature, is another. It was designed by Vanvitelli, made at Rome, and blessed by Benedict XIV. It is composed of precious marbles, inlaid with costly mosaics and replete with ornaments in silver and bronze.

The water supply is brought nine miles by aqueduct, some of the arches attaining a height of 263 feet and the longest span being 110 feet. The streets are poorly lighted with manufactured gas, save in the heart of the new city, where electricity is used.

Business methods are antiquated. The shops are poorly con-

The Portuguese are the most loquacious people on earth, but they are sincere. They will talk by the hour, and if one interrupts, they pour forth a virtual flood of proverbs upon you. They are a nation of gamblers. They play at everything, and Lisbon has hundreds of lotteries. The jails have no glass in the windows and prisoners beg of the passersby.

Lisbon is reached from the sea by the Tagus river, navigable for the largest vessels. For the nine miles up to the city there is an unbroken panorama of picturesque beauty of the Cintra mountains, the chief coast range.

The Shirley Co. has something strong although not of the popularly attractive sort in "Michael Strogoff" this week. It is a story of Russian military adventure depicting the fate of a dispatch bearer for the czar who fell into the hands of a Tartar chief. Miss Von Waldron plays the leading lady part this week, with George McQuarrie in the title role. Robert Siddell is the villain of the play and there is plenty of villainy in it.

The big feature of the new bill for the week beginning tonight is Adie and her lions. This act is supplemented by the usual number of vaudeville specialties.

Here is a little story about Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, who renders his concert program at the armory Wednesday evening: "I was but 16," he says, "when I announced a somewhat ambitious concert in eastern Russia. On arrival I found there was no piano to be had except from a general who lived 15 miles off. I took a troika and drove out to see the feller, who was quite willing to lend the instrument. I sat down to try it, but found the instrument was in such bad condition that many of the hammers would stick to the strings instead of falling back. By this time it was too late to search the country for another piano. My audience was assembling and in the emergency a strange idea struck me. I sent for a bunch of hazel switches and hired an intelligent fellow to sweep down the refractory hammers as fast as they

AT THE THEATRES

SPOKANE Here are some of the songs in "George Washington Jr.," musical comedy here tonight and tomorrow evening: "He Was a Wonderful Man," "Virginia," "You're a Grand Old Flag," "All Aboard for Broadway," "I'll Be There with Bells On," "I've Never Been Over There," "The Wedding of the Blue and the Gray," "Colonel Chorus" and "If stuck. It was a droll episode. Bang would go my crashing arpeggios, and immediately afterwards—swish went the hazel switches. I really think the audience liked this extraordinary duo better than anything they had ever seen or heard. The receipts were less than $25." His receipts now range in the neighborhood of $3,000 for each concert.

Washington Should Come to Life." The production is said to be staged attractively. It is one of Coahan's hits.

A crowded house got considerably less than half its money's worth at the "Devil's Auction" last night. From the character of the production this is evidently its last trip, or should be at any rate. The promised new features failed to materialize to any appreciable extent.

WASHINGTON

The liveliest bill the house has had for a long time opened last night. It is all comedy and music, with enough dancing and a card trick and monologue specialty by way of variation. There is a good "coon" sketch by a couple of old timers, a wild west skit with a touch of the dramatic, a song and dance trio in fancy dress, and two more comic sketches. The whole show is a good antidote for the blues or anything else beyond the reach of medicine.

COLUMBIA

The house was sold out last night for the first performance of a week's bill of "By Right of Sword," and the big production was put on in very presentable shape. Miss Brissac in the role of the Russian heroine gave a most attractive rendition of the part, and her support by Willard Feeley was good. The same may be said of the rest of the cast, although this week's play is a wide variation from the ordinary stock bill. It is a story of adventure in the land of the czar, naturally with a heavy villain part played by Noel Travers. An extra effort has been made for scenic effect in costuming and settings.

LITTLE SMALLPOX AND THAT NOT BAD

"We are treating about 30 cases of smallpox just now," said Health Officer Grive today. "The cases are not of a malignant type." The doctor stated that the presence of the disease in this city is due to travelers bringing it with them. But few if any cases are of local origin.

The plans for the new isolation hospital are not completed," the doctor states. "I will go out to the proposed site some day this week and select the particular spot for the new buildings. Until this is done nothing can be settled as regards grades and foundation elevations. I have neglected going out to the ground and settling on the site building owing to the inclement weather.
