

RUBBERNECK OWLS, New Method of Catching the One that Feeds in Prairie Dog Holes

DALLAS, Texas, Dec. 11.—Travelers who have noticed the wise-looking little owls sitting up in front of prairie dog holes have often heard from old plainmen how hard it is to capture one of these owls.

As it well known, the owls won't run until the intruder is very near. Then the owl plunges down into the hole.

"Knowledge" Nelms of this city has discovered a new scheme. When the owl won't run until the intruder is very near, then the owl plunges down into the hole.
