

DESTINY VIEWING NAPOLEON

The Coming Metropolitan City

Napoleon, on the beautiful Willapa Bay is destined to become a great Pacific Coast metropolis. It is located about 14 miles north of the Columbia river and 45 miles south of Grays Harbor, on a large beautiful peninsula, projecting into the bay. The townsite has been platted on a broad plateau about 150 feet above sea level affording a picturesque view of Willapa bay, and the surrounding country. The depth of the water in the Willapa harbor and the channel from the ocean entrance to Napoleon is deep enough to float large ocean going vessels. The billions of feet of fir, spruce and hemlock timber at Napoleon and in the Willapa bay country will keep the proposed mills busy for an indefinite period. The leading industries in the Willapa country demand a large commercial center and Napoleon being the logical location for a great city, will derive revenue from most every industry in this territory. The oyster industry alone when developed, will be large enough to support many thousands of people. Last year oysters and fish shipped from the Willapa bay country amounted to more than $350,000.
