100,000 SEE GAME

(By United Press Leased Wire)
 NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Coogan's bluff will be jammed to the limit, the Washington viaducts free standing room will be filled and many seats at the polo grounds will hold a divided population when the New York Americans and the New York Nationals meet this afternoon. It is estimated that 100,000 persons will witness the first four games.
 The Giants and Highlanders' post-season series holds as much interest for New York as does the argument to settle the question of which team shall be hailed as the world's champions.
 The New York teams finished second in each league, and although Manhattan is evenly divided over the merits of the clubs, the sporting fraternity favors the Giants at odds of 10 to 8.

LIKE SHAKESPEARE'S HERO, HE WILL HUNT DISGUISED AS A TREE

(By United Press Leased Wire)
 CHICO, Cal., Oct. 13.—Harold Jensen, a state university student, will hunt geese this fall disguised as a tree. The disguise, ordered recently from a theatrical scenic painter, has just arrived.
 When Jensen is inclosed in the costume he resembles a scrub oak. He expects to be able to stalk wild geese and get close up to them by means of the painted tree.
 Jensen says he got the idea from Shakespeare's account of how soldiers attacking the army of Macbeth approached while concealed under tree branches carried in their hands.

HOW A BLIND

broke in the younger child, unable to restrain her excitement.
 "No, she's going to get away," added the elder, breathlessly. "Oh, run! run! Oh, daddy, how that girl's horse can run!"
 "Oh," with a sigh of relief. "She's got away. And now the soldiers are coming. They are after the bad robbers, and they are killing them all. See them shoot! Now they've killed every one of them."
 "And there's the girl's sweetheart," suddenly exclaimed the other child, "riding up just as fast as he can come. Now he's jumping off his horse, and she's running to meet him. And now they're kissing one another. And that's all."
 During the excited recital by the youngsters the blind man sat leaned forward in his seat, every energy concentrated on the doings of the picture, his body swaying with excitement, and his sightless eyes now staring through the gloom at the flashing screen, now turning first to one and then the other of his little daughters as the excited childish voices graphically described the scenes enacted.
 And so, through the eyes of his children, the blind man "saw" the moving picture show.
