DON'T WANT TO HONOR CHIEF JOSEPH WOULD ORGANIZE CATTLEMEN'S TRUST

The efforts of Professor Edmond S. Meany to erect a monument to the memory of Chief Joseph, the Nez Perce Indian, does not meet with the approval of Lew P. Wilnot, of Keller, Washington, who probably knows as much about this famous chieftain and his depredations as does any other man in Iowa or Washington, says the Seattle News.

Mr. Wilnot was a volunteer scout and accompanied the United States troops and volunteer parties during the days when Chief Joseph and his warriors wrought so much havoc in Camas county, Idaho. Mr. Wilnot believes Chief Joseph to be nothing more than a murderer and suggests that if the Washington State Historical society has any money to be spent in monuments to be erected to commemorate the bravery of the men shot down, some of them in cold blood, by this Indian chief to whose memory Professor Meany, of the Washington State University, desires the erection of a monument.

Mr. Wilnot has written to the News protesting against this action on the part of the Historical Society. In his communication he says:

"I notice an article in an issue of the News of recent date, stating that the Historical Society of Washington was going to erect a monument over the grave of Chief Joseph. I should like to have Professor Meany state what Joseph ever did that would entitle him to this great distinction. All I ask is that the professor confine himself to the truth."

"I will with your permission, Mr. Editor, state why a monument should be erected to the memory of some of the men who gave up their lives in order to protect the citizens of Camas Prairie, against the depredations of this Indian, who had never been wronged by an individual of that country."

"Chief Joseph was an Indian. This he could not help, and he hated the whites with that bitter intensity, that is born in the Indian. That Chief Joseph had a good and valid reason for hating the white race I think is true, because of the treatment he received from them. But when Chief Joseph through his cowardly nature, failed to inflict punishment on those who had wronged him, and came over into our country and murdered and robbed men, women and children, who had never wronged him or any other Indian, he placed himself beyond the pale of sympathy of all fair minded persons."

"Will Professor Meany tell us why it was that Chief Joseph had Lew Day shot in the back when he was going to General Howard for assistance and why it was that Chief Joseph waylaid Ben Norton, wounded Mrs. Norton, killed Johnny Chamberlain and his six year old daughter, and took his baby girl by the heels and knocked its head against the ground, and caused it to bite a part of its tongue off, or perhaps they cut it off—and then ran a knife down through its neck, between the jugular vein and the neck bone; then captured Mrs. Chamberlain and subjected her to treatment so inhuman that it cannot be published?"

"As to his bravery, I owe it to his cowardice that I am now permitted this effort to do him justice. Had he been a brave man I would not now be here to tell of his butchery. When he failed to blot us out of existence, after our little handful of soldiers had charged through his line and scattered himself and his warriors like so many scared sheep, and through the death of our captain we had been halted in the prairie, reduced by casualties to less than 10 men, and surrounded by all of his warriors, did he then show any signs of bravery? Not he."

"And when Lieutenant Rains and a little handful of men went to the rescue of Blewett, were surrounded at the foot of Cottonwood hill, and with six of them cut off, took refuge behind some rocks, where they stood off the whole of this brave Indian's band until their ammunition was exhausted, it was then that Chief Joseph showed his bravery by walking up to those gallant United States soldiers and shooting each one in the head."

"Now that Chief Joseph has paid the penalty that nature exacts from all of us why not let him rest in peace. And if there are to be any monuments erected by the Washington Historical Society why not erect one over the place where Lew Day was shot, one over the scene of Captain Randall's death; or one where Ben Evans and D. H. Houser were killed while going to the relief of soldiers who were reported as being surrounded by the Indians. Thus would the society receive the commendation of all good citizens."

"So long as Chief Joseph's admirers try to make an unsuspecting public believe that he was a hero then so long will the truth be written by Lew Wilnot."

At Hebron, Ill. Miss Harrison, daughter of a farmer, and Clarence Peet, her escort, have been shot and killed by Dell Case, a jealous lover.

Fort Worth, Texas, is temporarily the home of a man who is imbued with an ambition to organize a cattlemen's trust. His name is R. S. Freedman, and he hails from New York city. At Fort Worth he has been exploiting his scheme industriously, but so far Texas cattlemen have not rallied around his banner numerously. The Fort Worth Telegram quotes him as saying:

"The plan of the organization is to secure as far as possible every cattleman in the United States as a member, basing the fees on the number of cattle owned by the member. As soon as the organization is completed it will open offices at every packing center in the United States, not only in the centers, but wherever there is a packing house, there will be found a branch of the association, which will keep a perfect tab on what the other fellow is doing."

"This association will know in so far as possible, just how many cattle are in the possession of the packers, how much dressed meat they may have on hand, in other words, the association will know what the demand for dressed meat will be next week, it will know how many head the packers will have to buy before they will be able to fill that demand or shut down their plants."

"In addition to the above, this association will know just how many marketable cattle belonging to members of the association that there may be ready to ship, and who has them."

"With this information, the association will be in a position to make the market price on the cattle, and when they have made that price, the members will be instructed to ship their stock in the quantities needed. This will make a greater trust than now exists, but it will be controlled by the stockmen, they will be in possession of the lines, and drive instead of being led."

"Now there is just so many cattle that will be marketed within the next 12 months. Every head placed on the market will be bought and made into beef. The market fluctuates only because the packers take advantage of the ignorance of the cowman who does not know how many head the packers have on hand, and consequently how many they must buy. If these cows have been shipped to the stock yards they cannot afford to hold out and wait, as the expenses would be too great. The packer knows this. But supposing the packers would have to agree to take so many head at a certain price agreed upon in advance, then there would be no waiting in the yards. The packers must have the cattle or they cannot run. They have money invested, and cannot afford to wait as well as the cattlemen, if only the cattlemen could wait together and know when the wait. This the International Cattlemen's association will know when to do, and will so inform its members."
