E. GABY, Idaho city, June 11th, 1864.

The following account of the successful search for the bodies of those ill-fated gentlemen, is published in the Lewiston Age of the 11th:

ED. AGE—Sir: For the satisfaction of the reading public, we thought it proper to give a little history of facts in regard to a journey made in search of Magruder and party, or of what little remained of those who were once our dear friends. We left Elk city, 29th May, made Red river meadows, and spent the evening with our friend, George Zeigel.

May 30th.—Made what is known as the Mountain meadows, where we camped. The snow had nearly disappeared, but we were obliged to tie our horses, as there was scarcely a vestige of anything green to be seen.

May 31st.—Made a start at 4 o'clock in the morning; we made Little Salmon about 11 A. M. where we camped, and prospected for grass. In the afternoon we moved camp one three miles up the Little Salmon, where we camped for the night. Page expressed some uneasiness, for he hardly knew where he was, but he left camp and was absent some three hours. While gone, he discovered the little prairie, where they camped the first night after the murder of Magruder and party; there he found the legskins they left, and he knew where he was.

June 1st.—We made a start at half-past 4 A. M. After some eight or ten miles travel we met a Mr. Adams on his way from Bitter Root, and, as he had the misfortune to lose his provisions in crossing the Bitter Root river, we was as much pleased to meet us as we were him. He returned with us to the fatal spot, where Magruder and party fell victims to the demons in human shape. We arrived at the spot after a long and tedious ride. About 4 o'clock P. M., we unsaddled our animals, and proceeded to search for the remains. The first thing discovered was the gunny-sack of tin-cups, coffee-pots, etc., which all who heard the evidence of Page at the trial of Renton, Lower and Koman, will remember as being described by him; the next discovery were the blankets which were wound round the bodies of the two brothers; the next discovery was the tent and blankets which Allen and Phillips were lashed up in; these we searched with care; we found in the pockets of Allen a portmanteau, in which we found twenty-five cent pieces, American coin, a gold ring, a tumbler, and some needles; we also found Allen's watch; we found Phillips' hat; Holt knew it to be Phillips'; Page knew the pants to be Allen's, in which was found the portmanteau; we also found pieces of skull bones in this particular spot, and some hair said to be, by those who knew, Allen's; also, the under jaw of Allen or Phillips; we also found the under jaw of one of the others, or supposed to be, as it was near the blankets which once encased their bodies; we also found two blue jean coats, in one of which was found the memorandum book, which shows that the two brothers had $1,658.78 on their persons when they started for Oregon with Magruder and party; we found in camp, near the spot where Page saw Allen shot, a piece of his skull, supposed to have been blown off with the shot-gun; we found the quartz specimens, which were taken from Magruder's cantinas, and thrown away by one of the villains; we found the rings, buckles, etc., as described by Page, buried in the ashes; we then repaired to the spot where Magruder received the fatal blow or, we may say, blows, for we found several pieces of his skull, which was literally hacked to pieces. Oh, what an awful sight! He was murdered nearly half a mile from the others; his coat and vest was somewhat torn by the wolves, but enough was left so that they looked quite natural; we then went with Page to the spot where he had thrown the guns; we there found Mr. Beachy's gun, the one he had loaned to Magruder, and found it to be loaded, but the caps had been removed; we also found the gun which Page said belonged to one of the brothers; also, one rifle and the shot-gun which Page said was once Koman's. We found other relics and things much the same as described by Page. It makes the heart sick to think of this horrible tragedy. On our return we went to the spot which had been described by Page, and found the remains of the slaughtered animals. We hope never to witness such a sight again.

"MOTHER," said a little urchin who was reading a newspaper, "what kind of women are the women of the pave? Are they those low-flying women that have skirts so long as to sweep the pavements?" "Yes, my child."
