A Responsible Position.

In the affairs of a County, the position of magistrate is one of great importance. The district Magistrate can do much good in a community by compromising and setting the petty dispute among neighbors, thus keeping them out of expensive and often needless litigation. He ought to be a leader of progressive thought, and always ready to further any movement having as its object, the improvement of roads, schools, and all other institutions tending to make better living conditions. As a peace officer he can by enforcing the law in ordinary misdemeanors, do much to promote peace and good order in the neighborhood and about public assemblies. By selecting good citizens for jury duty, he aids criminal and civil courts, in a most substantial way, as an intelligent jury is a most important branch of the courts of record. In the Criminal Court especially is this so, the success or failure of the administrator of justice in this court, depending upon the integrity and intelligence of its Grand and Pettit Juries, to a large degree.

The office of Magistrate is one of as much honor and of more importance to the individual community served than that of Governor of the State. The Magistrates in quarterly session constitute a legislature for the County, and by progressive thought and action can advance the material interest of the County, and by the reverse course can retard the progress of a County—Livingston Enterprise.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE HOSPITALS CURB TRACHOMA

The establishing of small trachoma hospitals in localities, where this contagious disease of the eyes is prevalent presents the best solution of the trachoma problem, according to the statement contained in the annual report of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service. The Service now has five trachoma hospitals in the three states of Kentucky, Virginia, and West Virginia, and so great has been the number of applicants for treatment that a waiting list has been established. In the past fiscal year 12,000 cases of trachoma have been treated, the larger proportion of which were cured, while those in which a cure was effected have been greatly improved and rendered harmless to their associates. The great majority of these trachoma patients were people who lived in remote sections far removed from medical assistance, and who, but for the hospital care and treatment provided would have remained victims of the disease practically the remainder of their lives.

"When it is considered," the report of the Service states, "that thousands of persons suffering with trachoma, a dangerous contagious disease, would otherwise remain untreated, it is realized how far-reaching results have been obtained through these trachoma hospitals and the other public health work done in this connection. It would be impossible to estimate with any degree of accuracy the number of people who have been saved from contracting this communicable disease by thus removing these thousand foci of infection."

In addition to treating persons with the disease the hospitals have been used for educational work. Doctors and nurses have visited the homes of the patients and have explained how to prevent the development and recurrence of the disease. One thousand three hundred and eight such visits were made during the year in Kentucky alone. "It has taken some time," the report continues, "to educate the people afflicted with this disease to the importance of cleanliness and the use of simple hygienic measure in their daily life." That result have been obtained is evidenced by the noticeably better observance of hygienic precautions by those among whom the work has been done.

In addition to the hospital work, surveys were made in 16 counties in Kentucky, especially among school children. Eighteen thousand and sixteen people were examined, 7 per cent being found to have trachoma. Similar inspections in certain localities of Arizona, Alabama and Florida resulted in finding the disease present in from three to six children out of every hundred. Periodic examinations of school children for the disease and exclusion of the afflicted from the public schools, are two of the recommendations the Public Health Service lays emphasis upon.

One of the special features of the trachoma work was the giving of lectures and clinics before medical societies in various counties where trachoma hospitals could not be established. Patients were operated upon in the presence of physicians and the most modern methods of treatment demonstrated. Throughout, the purpose has been to stimulate local interest in talking up the campaign to eradicate trachoma.
