Those who have already paid $4.50 for full road time, will only be given credit for one half time. All overseers are requested to hand in their reports to me by Dec. 23, 1919.

"How Things Look to a Man Up a Tree."

I am a high society jink. So it doesn't hurt I think to step a step or so, the turkey trot or the bad tango, and nibble forbidden fruit in reach, and wink at what the preachers preach.

I am a very prominent guy, so watch the calendar when I die. Another red letter day will hang up high. The rural man will not go by.

I am an open-hearted jay. No use to save for a rainy day. Let nickels, dimes and dollars fly. Do not trouble I'll get by. I'll live until I die.

Things to eat became so high, they could not buy. So two hungry men thought to try another way. One would fish to get his meat, while one would beg to get to eat. The fisherman got but a nibble, the beggar got but a crumb. The fisherman said "I got no bite, the beggar said "My bite was light and this certainly is too light a diet, we cannot live there's no use to try it."

The lightning killed a certain Jason. I asked for information, of how many licks it hit, and was the Jason thinking with it. The man said, "I was a dunce, that the Jason was not a meddler, and the lightning struck but once. But made it pay, and did not have to hammer and peck all day, to put a Jason away." This is the ending line, called by some the toothpick time. I take one stand.
