Tennessee Farmers Learning Value Of Grouping Cattle For Shipment

County Agents Responsible for Success of the Work—They Have Shown Farmers With Less Than Carloads How They Can Increase Profits.

By C. E. Brehm.

Co-operative marketing in Tennessee began with a co-operative shipment of fat cattle from Franklin county on April 20, 1918, with the assistance of the county agent, who was instrumental in organizing the farmers in his county for this purpose. The shipment consisted of ten carloads including 263 head of cattle, ranging in weight from 850 to 1,228 pounds. Twelve farmers were interested in the shipment.

These cattle were consigned to the St. Louis Stock Yards and were sold on April 23, for prices ranging from $10 to $14.25 per hundred weight. They netted the farmers $35,868.57. The best load, weighing 1,157 pounds, brought the high price. Buyers in the county bid on these cattle before shipment at prices ranging from $7 to $11.25 per hundred weight, according to the quality and condition of them. The owner of the cattle, which sold for $16.25 on the St. Louis market, was offered $11.25 per hundred weight at home. It cost about $1.25 per hundred weight, including the drift to market these cattle in St. Louis, but in spite of this marketing cost, according to the farmers who were interested in the shipment and several who went with the cattle, they realized $7,000 more than the local market offered.

From this initial shipment, co-operative marketing spread rapidly. Progressive farmers readily see that such marketing enables them to get the highest price for these goods. Co-operative marketing brings the larger central market, even for the small farmer with less than a carload of live stock, in direct competition with the local market and brings prices to their highest level. County agents to a large extent have been responsible for the success of this work and its rapid development. They have performed an invaluable service for the farmers in their respective counties in creating marketing organizations and showing how each farmer, though having less than a carload, can ship with other farmers in the same car, getting all the benefits of the carlot shipper and yet keep accounts straight so that each one can get the actual cash value for his product, according to its quality, less the marketing expense. They have also assumed largely the burden of getting such associations started successfully.

At the present time co-operative marketing is being carried on very successfully in twelve counties in the state and quite a number more are preparing to initiate the movement this fall with hogs, at the same time. In those counties in which co-operative marketing has been started, the shipments have rapidly increased after the initial shipment, thus showing that such marketing enables farmers to get the higher prices. Of course it is to be expected that there will be one or two in a county marketing through such an association that will not be satisfied and complain that they did not get enough for their product. Most of the critics are like a farmer in one county where co-operative marketing was recently begun under the guidance of the county agent. This farmer brought in a boar for shipment. The county agent advised him that it would not pay to ship the boar and that he should keep it at home, cut it and then at a later date ship it as a stag, in which way it would bring more money. The farmer insisted that the boar was no account and wanted to get rid of it.

True to the advice of the county agent the boar only netted $15. The farmer was dissatisfied and said that co-operative shipping did not pay. In other words, he kicked and found fault with co-operative marketing rather than with himself. The other twenty-two farmers were enthusiastic about the results, inasmuch as the shipment netted the farmers $386 more than the local market. Accordingly they called on the county agent to help them get up another car of hogs the following week. While the car was being loaded the farmer who had the boar in the previous shipment came around with twelve hogs to put in the car.

The products marketed co-operatively thus far thru the marketing associations that the county agents have organized include hogs, cattle, sheep, chickens, wool, sweet potatoes and Irish potatoes. In ten counties co-

Eastland.

We notice the negroes of Marion county have organized into a political organization for their own benefit. Several years ago a negro ran for the office of Registrar in Marion county, and was elected. His opponent was a white man of good standing and had served one term as registrar. Well, we haven't any negroes at this place to deal with.

The high cost of living is the trouble with the people out here. Corn is $2.30 per bushel, flour is $1.90 per sack, 24 lbs; coffee 50c per lb.; sugar 22c per lb. and can't hardly get it at that; shorts are $3.90 100 lb., dry goods of all kinds are high, so you see the increase in wages don't amount to much after all: The least wages paid at this place is $3.13 a day and it runs to $4.60. When a man with a large family buys the necessities of life out of that he has nothing left for a rainy day, but it seems that some people think that the laboring man is not entitled to any more than it takes to feed his family.

Well, it will soon be time for the candidates to come around soliciting votes. In White county we usually have ten or twelve out for the same office. They don't hold any primary or conventions in this county for county offices. Just the man who has the slickest tongue is the winner.

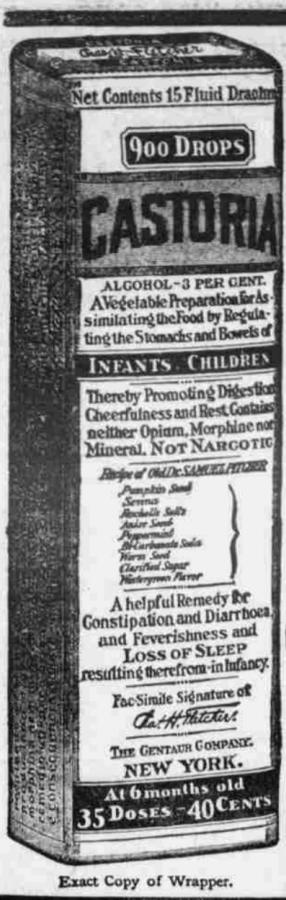

Well, I wonder who will be the candidates for president this year. Don't hear much about the presidential election yet, but I guess the papers will be full of election news pretty soon. J. G.
