A SOUTHERN FARM HOUSE FOR A SMALL FAMILY

RURAL ENGINEERING
 U. S. DEPT. AGR.
 DESIGN NO. 522

Better Homes For Tennessee Farms.

Tennessee farmer are fast building better farm homes and other farm buildings, but more of them are needed throughout the state, says H. B. Bliss, rural engineering specialist, Division of Extension, University of Tennessee. The fall months are a good time to build, the farmers having more time during this season for building than during other seasons.

A southern farmhouse for a small family, with floor plan, is shown above. This plan was prepared in the office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering of the department of agriculture, and was developed after extensive surveys in the South to determine the household needs of families with reference to local agriculture, climate, and domestic help. The aim is primarily to provide a cool and convenient kitchen and dining room for the housewife; bedrooms and living room with best exposure; facilities for outdoor sleeping, and an easily heated house, cool in summer and with sunny rooms in winter. The materials selected are those commonly used in the South.

Complete working plans for this house may be obtained by those contemplating building by application thru their county agricultural agent or the Division of Extension, University of Tennessee, from the office of public roads and rural engineering, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. Call for Design Number 522.

TENNESSEE FARMERS ADOPT RESOLUTIONS DISPLAYING ROBUST AMERICAN SPIRIT

The recent session of the Middle Tennessee Farmers' Institute at Columbia was one of the most successful and generally profitable meetings of that excellent body of progressive Tennesseans ever assembled.

The convention adopted resolutions regarding present issues and conditions that are most pleasing in tone and full of the robust American spirit, which will be of interest to every citizen of the state. The resolutions as adopted follow in full:

"We renew our expression of loyalty to the institutions of America. We believe that this is the best government ever devised by the mind of man under divine guidance. Whatever reforms may be necessary or available in government can be made without doing violence to the eternal principles upon which this nation was founded. Whatever protests are made against existing conditions are made against the law or its administration and not against the institutions of America.

"We distinctly deprecate any effort to array one class against another or to appeal to any group of citizens. Our system wisely recognizes no groups of citizens, but all enjoy the same rights and privileges. Any departure from this established doctrine threatens the destruction of the vital principles of American democracy, under which opportunity is boundless and open to all. A man or any organization that would injure or do violence to this government is unworthy the protection of the flag.

"Agriculture is the basis of all commerce and industry. The great world need of today is production. Production is dependent upon labor. The solidarity of labor is such that the wages and hours of labor prevailing in other industries are reflected upon the farm. It is idle, therefore, to continue to advance the cost of production without expecting to pay an increased price for the product in the other industries of the nation.

"The farmers are continuing their best efforts to produce under conditions that would appall less resolute men, and they demand of both labor and capital that they, too, shall earnestly speed up their part of the production so urgently needed. We have reached the critical point in regard to shorter hours of labor, and we know that a forty-four-hour week will neither feed nor clothe the world.

"We believe in the ownership of private property. In individual initiative and incentive. It is only in the safeguarding and protection of every right of private property that there can be perpetuated the full measure of individual initiative and emulation upon which democracy is based and by which its future is assured.

"To attempt to thwart natural economic laws by legislation is useless. The law of supply and demand, unhampered by monopolies and unhindered by attempts at governmental price fixing, should have full sway. We affirm that the application of price fixing in an effort to reduce the cost of living has militated against the producer without giving the anticipated relief to the consumer, and this has resulted in the decreased production of farm products. The right to quit work is not denied, but the right to quit work in unions does not extend to those who work for the state, and in all cases of strikes the public interests must be paramount to those of any group.

"The farmers believe in collective bargaining, and such legislation should be enacted by Congress and the State Legislatures as will guarantee this right.

"The drift of population from country to city is not only a menace to the future food production of the nation, but it threatens the political life of the nation. It is today the most momentous issue before the public. To the end that effective measures may be taken to check this tendency to still further congest the centers of population and add fuel to the fires of unrest and discontent, we favor the appointment, under proper resolution and appropriation by the next Legislature, of a commission composed of farmers and farm experts, who shall investigate such legislation as may be necessary to encourage the ownership of farms and to develop the rural life so that it may hold out the same promise of material rewards and social opportunities that are offered to the young men and women in the towns and cities. The increase in tenancy, placing the most productive lands in the care and custody of those who are not vitally concerned about their continued productivity, and who have no abiding interest in the community where they may live, should challenge the attention of every patriot concerned for the economic and political future of the nation. The commission above mentioned should be charged with the duty of investigating and reporting upon all progressive legislation enacted in this and other forward-looking nations of the world for the encouragement of farm ownership and the advancement of rural life. Such investigation should include the subject of rural credits, community schools, improved roads, better marketing facilities, farm taxation and related subjects.

"The State Department of Agriculture should be reorganized by the next Legislature, to the end that it will be the state clearing house for the agricultural activities of the state. It should be performed upon the model of other progressive states, where a State Board of Agriculture, nominated by the farmers' organizations, should take the place of the present political organization. The executive head of the Bureau of Agriculture should not be selected by reason of any political favors already conferred or expected, but solely with reference to his fitness for the task. The salary of such executive, to be named by the Board of Agriculture, should be sufficient to attract the most capable talent available. No reflection is intended on any Commissioner of Agriculture, past or present, but it is the system against which we protest.

"More generous appropriations should be made for public education, and particularly for the rural community schools. It should no longer be necessary for farmers to move from their farms to turn them over to the mercies of tenants, and still further congest the cities and towns or permit their children to grow up in ignorance. The university of the state, and especially its college of agriculture, should be adequately supported, to the end that there may be developed a rural and farm leadership that will be capable of competing with the leadership of any other interest or industry. Nothing save public education will do more to make the country attractive than good roads, and we urge that increased state and Federal aid be given for this purpose. We appreciate the fact that if the country home is to retain the boys and girls it must be made more attractive, therefore, we urge increased appropriations for additional instructors in rural sanitation, in rural home economics, and in rural life.
