ELECTIONS SHOW DEMOCRATIC TREND

REPUBLICAN OBSTRUCTIONS BROUGHT BAD RESULTS

Fact That Democrats Carried Harding's Home Indicates Waning of President's Personal Popularity—Virginia Returns Largest Democratic Majority in the History of the State.

Washington, November 23.—The sweeping Democratic victories on November 8, including the capture of numerous Republican strongholds, add to the happy, harmonious and hopeful auspices under which the Hon. Cordell Hull assumes the chairmanship of the Democratic national committee.

Virginia returns the largest Democratic majority in its history, after a campaign in which the Republicans had an exceptionally strong candidate for governor and after they had waged the most aggressive campaign ever made by them in the state.

While victory in New York City was assured in advance the tremendous majority there was surprising and gratifying.

The election of the first Democratic mayor in Syracuse in 15 years is regarded as a personal repudiation of the autocratic reactionary Republicanism of Gov. Miller in his home town.

Recent elections in Connecticut, where the turner of the Democrats was unusually large, was followed on November 8 by a Democratic victory in the important city of Bridgeport and the ousting of a five-term Republican mayor.

As pointed out by Chairman Hull, of the Democratic national committee, the elections generally indicate a trend away from the Republican party and a realization on the part of the people that Republican obstruction and defeat of the Democratic program of reconstruction following the armistice has brought about disastrous results to business and industry.

The fact that the Democrats carried President's Harding home town of Marion would seem to indicate the waning of the personal popularity of the president. To this is added a touch of irony in the fact that Marion voted for the state soldiers' bonus after President Harding, in a speech to the Senate, had brought about the postponement and perhaps the death of the national bonus bill.

National Democrats at the capital are greatly heartened by these general Democratic victories, which they assert will make for party solidarity and, as Chairman Hull expresses it, "will inspire Democrats everywhere to renewed efforts with increasing expectations of success."

Senator Swanson, Democrat, Virginia, correctly characterized the disarmament conference on the limitation of armaments and voiced the hopes and beliefs of his party and a large majority of the American people in the following extract from a recent address on that subject delivered on the floor of the Senate:

"A more important conference has not assembled since the nations of the world met at Versailles to negotiate peace and devise the terms of world adjustment. Around this conference clusters the hope of a disturbed and apprehensive world. Upon the statesmanship displayed by these conferees depends the future peace of the world and its safe and sound reconstruction. May its deliberations be guided by a wisdom commensurate with its responsibilities. Every effort should be made to make its conclusions wise and successful. Nothing should be done to add to its embarrassment and increase its difficulties. The nations here assembled should discuss matters frankly and in a spirit of conciliation and co-operation. If this conference adjourns without accomplishing the purposes for which it was called, it will be a dark day in the annals of the world. Better that it had never been called than to have it fail. If no agreement is reached as to limitation of armament, the nations here assembled will depart with increased distrust and suspicion, to be followed by increased armies and navies, with all their attendant burdens. But disarmament, the main purpose of the conference, can be accomplished only when national differences are settled and national confidence restored. The just rights of each nation should be fully recognized and all unjust demands firmly resisted. A settlement to be permanent must be just. We should first convince those here assembled that we have no selfish purpose to serve; that we seek only common good for ourselves and the rest of the world. There are many difficulties confronting the conference, but I believe with proper forbearance and concessions they can be successfully settled."

IN MEMORIAM In loving memory of my husband, William Jones, who died December 7, 1920. More and more each day I miss you. Friends may think the wound is healed, But they little know the bitter sorrow That's in my heart concealed.

Peaceful be your rest, dear Billie; It is sweet to call your name. In life I loved you dearly; In death it's just the same.

Your memory will be always dear, As in the hour you passed away; When days are gloomy and friends seem far, That's the time, dear Billie, I long for you. Sadly missed by your loving wife, MRS. WILLIAM JONES.

"PUNKINS"

"The pumpkin is the autumn football. In the corner of the old rail fence; Each stalk is a lively player, And I am the audience."

Pumpkins, sweet potatoes, peanuts, popcorn, hickorynuts and all the other good things coming just now make us think this is the best time of the year. And Christmas just ahead; then we look forward to fresh mustard greens and strawberries in the spring and picnics and big meetings in the summer. In fact, the whole year is full of good things. I am expecting a present this Christmas, as I kept the baby for Mrs. Hill about two hours one evening recently. She said it had been only about 10 or 15 minutes, but we don't always agree about time, anyway, and I never argue with the weaker sex.

I do not know who took the "n" out and put an "mp" into "pumpkin." Probably Mr. Webster thought he would show how smart he was and make the change. However, it tastes just as good one way as the other. There have been some terrible tales told on the length and swift growth of the "pumpkin" vines in some of my neighbors' new grounds, but I hope to get up something to beat them yet. It is hard to tell why the "pumpkin" grows such a long vine. Possibly being an air plant, it needs lots of space from which to draw its life. Or, it may hope to thus scatter its seed and promote "pumpkin" life. If the "pumpkin" had its way without opposition, however, this would soon be a "world of pumpkins." Man has advantage over the "pumpkin," as he has been given the privilege of using intelligence in increasing the human race. He does not always use this intelligence, as we sometimes see a large and influential family in one generation without a single representative in the next. On the other hand, we sometimes see a poor widow raise one little child that become a power in promoting life principles. The mother used intelligence. We can instill life principles into our children in various ways. About the only thing the father can do is to live so that his example will not in any way offset the teachings of the child's mother. A father can be of great help by singing to the child.

On the occasion of my lengthy association with the baby mentioned in the first part of this article, I took the little fellow to near the back door, sat down in a rocker and began using my strongest musical expressions. I imitated very effectively Caruso, John McCormick and other notables whom I heard on the graphophone at one of the neighbors' houses, enlarging somewhat on some of the notables' finer points. My voice sounded beautiful as it floated off down through the thicket back of the house, and I felt real sorry that so many good deserving people were missing the opportunity of hearing such good music. When Mrs. Hill came in I knew from the expression in her face that I had a great compliment coming, but she was so pleased that I had kept the baby so
