

POETRY.

THE DRUNKARD'S LAMENT.

BY JAMES STILLMAN.

Spare, memory spare, my tortur'd breast,
In pity let the past be hidden,
In shades of darkness let it rest,

Nor on the future dare I look,
I dread to see its prospects rise,
Of hope bereft, my spirit broke,

To all I fain would close my eyes,
What can the future bring to me?
Alas! what can I hope, or crave,

What else than this remains for me?
An early death, a drunkard's grave.
My life seems now a living death,

Corruption has its work begun,
And passing strangers scent my breath
And strive the loathsome smell to shun.

My dearest friends with blushing face, Turn from me now, with weeping eye,
And sighing at my deep disgrace,

With hurried footsteps pass me by.
My days are misery, and my nights
With horror upon horror teems,

I can't describe the forms which fright
Me in my wild and fever'd dreams.
The brand of shame is on my brow,

To dark despair my soul is driv'n,
The fire is burning in me now!
I feel abhor'd by earth and heav'n.

Like some plague-stricken wretch I feel,
A loathsome lezar and a pest,
Beyond the pow'r of man to heal,

And wand'ring Cain who knows no rest;
Reproach'd by conscience, self-condemn'd,
Yet to the poison still I fly.

A transient solace that bestows
A short oblivion to my grief,
But soon the wild excitement goes,

And leaves me shaking like a leaf.
Nought human can for me avail
O father, God! a wretch restore,

Ere the last link of life doth fail,
And I am lost for ever more.

VERY GOOD ADVICE.

Listen not to a bad suggestion. Did your companion whisper a profane thought in your ear? Forget it, and break away from such iron friendship. You are now comparatively cured—your heart is not coloured by vice. A profane word should not quiver on your lips, or a vile sentence escape your tongue. Beware how you listen to an impure and wicked associate. Give not a wrong suggestion a moment's lodgment under your bosom. It is astonishing to see "how guilt, once harboured in the conscious breast, intimidates the brave—degrades the great."

If there is a lovely object on earth—one on which angels gaze with delight—it is a virtuous youth, strong in his integrity, whom nothing can seduce. Alas! how few men of this description can be found. The ri-bald jest—the profane oath—the vulgar expression—the indecent song—the base allusion—are too often heard in every quarter.
But you are young—you have seen but little of the world, and know not the amount of wickedness by which you are surrounded. Listen then to our advice, and never give heed to any suggestion that you know is bad. Spurn every attempt to seduce your virtue. For Many a crime, deemed innocent on earth,
Is registered in heaven, and there no doubt,
Have each their record, with a curse annexed.

We repeat yield not to a bad suggestion.— You have need of very great caution and decision. The vicious may approach you unawares, when off your guard, and their plans be so well laid that you will slip, and fall, unless your resolution is strong, your determination firm. Once conquer, and you will be safe. But innocence has enemies.
You may be denounced for a season, but your rise will be glorious. You can exclaim with the poet—
"All your attempts
Fall on me, like brittle shaft on armour,
That break themselves; or like waves against a rock,
That leave no sign of their ridiculous fury
But foam and splinters; my innocence, like these,
Shall stand triumphant, and your malice serve
But for a trumpet to proclaim my conquest:
Nor shall you, though you do the worst fate ean, How'er condemn'd, affright an honest man."

LOAFERS.—Different nations have different kinds of loafers. The Italian spends his other day, was advising a youngster to get married, "because, then," said he, "my boy, you'll have somebody to pull off your boots for you when you go home drunk?"

AN EXQUISITE.—"Will you be so kind as to put that coin in my pawket?" said a dandy, who had bought a cent cigar and received his change in pennies, "those cop-paws will scent my fingaws."

The tongue of a wicked woman makes more mischief than a dozen lawyers can satisfactorily settle.
