Quills—things taken from the pinions of one goose to spread the opinions of another.

A man's dearest object should be his wife, but sometimes it is his wife's wardrobe.

Selected Miscellany.

A Rough Piece of Spunge.

Mr. McAdams, who lives on Eaton street, is a married man and the father of a family. Nevertheless, he has the heart of a boy and once in a while "steps down to the post office" and doesn't get back till midnight. He went out on just such a fruitless errand last night, and on his return signified his intention of taking a bath before retiring. He refused to comply with his wife's suggestion to light a lamp, and went around and filled his bathtub and fell over two rocking-chairs, an ottoman, a clothes-basket, a flower-stand, and some other things not necessary to mention, while he hunted for his sponge. He found it at last and began to bathe.

"Owtch!" he said. "And in a little while he remarked, 'Jiminy criminy!'"

"What is the matter?" asked Mrs. McAdams.

"Nothing," he said, stifling a groan; then he rasped the sponge up and down his ribs and swore. "His wife sat up in bed then. 'Something is the matter,' she said, 'and I want to know what it is.'"

"There ain't nothing the matter," he replied, indignantly. "Oh, thunder! This sponge is full of sand. Oh, Jeru-shy, what does all this mean? It's full of sand-bars and things."

And so he alternately rubbed and swore and howled until Mrs. McAdams got up and struck a light. Then she screamed and fell across the bed. Then she pounced her head upon the pillow and beat the headboard with her fists, and declared she would die—"Go out of the room," she said: "Oh, mercy! Te-he-he! Ha-ha-ha! Oh go, drown yourself! do! Te-he-he." And then she gave away to such extravagant emotions of hysterical mirth that she fell out of the window or threw the sponge at her head if she could explain.

"Throw the sponge at me," she screamed: "you have a te-he-he—right to Oh, my te-he-he sponge—you old fool—oh, I shall die, I know I shall, no wonder it's rough and scratchy—Oh, laws, McAdams, what a fool you are. You te—he-he washing with my chignon, and it's full of hair pins!"

Mr. McAdams don't tell his wife that he was ever so near a divorce, but he keeps her quiet, and she keeps the fence and related it to a group of sympathizing neighbors who retailed it to their delighted husbands.

A Bad Boy.

They say that the chief astronomer at the Washington Observatory was dreadfully sold a few days ago. A wicked boy, whose Sunday-school experience seems only to have made him more depraved, caught a fire-fly, and stuck it, with the aid of some magnifying glass, in the center of the largest lens in the telescope. That night, when the astronomer went to work, he perceived a blaze of light apparently in the heavens, and what amazed him more was that it would give a couple of spurts and then die out, only to burst forth again in a second or two. He examined it carefully for a few moments, and then began to do sums to discover where in the heaven that extraordinary star was placed. He thought he found the locality, and the next morning he telegraphed all over the universe that he had discovered a new and remarkable star of the third magnitude of Orion. In a day or two all the astronomers in Europe and America were studying Orion, and they gazed at it for hours until they were mad, and then they began to telegraph to the man in Washington to know what he meant. The discoverer took another look and found that the new star had moved about one billion miles in twenty-four hours, and upon examining it closely he was alarmed to perceive that it had legs! When he went on the dome, the next morning, to polish up his glass, he found the lightning-bug. People down at Alexandria, seven miles distant, heard parts of the swearing, and they say he infused into it much whole-souled sincerity and vigorous energy. The bills for telegraphic dispatches amounted to $2,600, and now the astronomer wants to find that boy. He wishes to consult with him about something.

PRODIGES.—We have two prodigies in Kansas in the shape of two girls, who are afflicted with a disease for which medical men find it difficult to apply a name. They take sudden fits of something or other, nobody knows what, and so around in all forms, biting the legs of chairs and tables. They handle red hot coals and put them into their mouths, and laugh at it as if it were the jolliest kind of sport imaginable. One day a doctor visited them and found both girls under the spell. He says he saw one crawling about, biting the legs of the chairs and tables, while the other was talking, laughing and dancing around the floor in a most unnatural manner. The legs of the chairs and tables bore evidences of the frequent spells of the one that was in the habit of biting, by being gnawed and

Central Park, New York.

The following appeared in the New York Evening Post, June 13th:

We all know that mechanical inventions are the peculiarity of our age, and have much to do with producing and distributing our most important commodities, while they promote the education of our people by taking the heaviest burdens from their hands, and by securing time and means for instruction. It is proper, therefore, to hold our inventors in honor and to present them and their inventions to the public eye in fitting monuments.

It has occurred to a number of our citizens that a suitable monument should be erected in the Central Park, in memory of the late Elias Howe, Jr., the inventor of the sewing machine, and that the money should be raised by voluntary offerings of not more than one dollar each from ladies who have known the benefits of the invention. Elias Howe, Jr., was not merely a successful inventor, whose needle-machos, more powerful, and humane than the famous "needle gun," has changed wholly the face of our most universal and fatiguing kind of domestic toil; he was also a good citizen and earnest patriot, who freely gave his money and time, and was ready to risk health and life for his country.

It is understood that an experienced sculptor has a satisfactory design for an impressive monument, with studies modeled from life, and that a gentleman of well-known integrity and thorough acquaintance with the history of the invention is ready to act as Treasurer.

Samuel Osgood, Howard Crosby, Wm. C. Bryant, Charles O'Connor, Henry W. Beecher, Henry V. Bellows, Willard Parker, E. H. Chapin, Fredk. de Peyster, Cyrus W. Field, John Cotton Smith, Alex. Masterton, R. Ogden Doremus, J. S. Gibbons.

We now beg leave to say that the Committee having organized and appointed Rev. Dr. Samuel Osgood, Chairman, Dr. R. Ogden Doremus, Secretary, and Alexander Masterton, Esq., Treasurer, we trust that the public will respond freely to the call, so that there may be as little delay as possible before this merited testimonial to the great inventor will be added to the noble works of art that adorn our Park. Subscriptions may be forwarded to Alexander Masterton, President Manufacturers' and Merchants' Bank, No. 561 Broadway, New York.
