Tilton Beecher.

Whatever may be the result of the pending suit or whatever may be the public opinion of Tilton, one thing is very certain, he is a man of fine culture; and one thing, if he is not now, who seemed to be filled with all of the finer sensibilities which go to make up the character of husband, father and Christian. This we think is shown by the following brief extracts from some of his poems, written before the alleged discovery of his trouble.
Thus he speaks of his home and his wife:
"I love one woman with a holy fire, Whom I revere as princess of my house, I stand with wondering awe before my babes,
And they revere me as their father's love." Thus he displays the parent in this sweet nursery song:
"Hark to Let us watch thee, you and I,
In the night,
Yet the never talk,
I believe we knowest best,
You and I, I don't walk on eggs!
There are
On his lips,
Talking baby's sense!"
Certainly we have never seen anything more beautifully and prayerfully expressive of the humble Christian's faith, hope and charity, than the following lines:
"In my heart of ache
I pondered Thy death,
While thoughts of Thee, like roses bloom, Bring sweetness in their train."
Arise, not, oh! my dead,
As He whom Mary sought, Sweet Mother, an empty tomb's instead—Her spouse all for naught, Oh! Lord, not so depart From my agonizing breast, But be annointed in spirit That by Thy death is best,
Or if Thou shalt arise, Abandon not Thy bride,
But lead it with Thee to the skies—A heart that Thou shalt save."

Yet we are told by the pious people of Plymouth Church that this man was a free-lover, cruel to his wife and family, and a Deist! Credat Deus!

Expulsion of United Gordon Claude from the Naval Academy.
Progress at times makes rapid strides, and for ages it has been a truism, that just in proportion as that toward which it tends is good, so is the momentum increased. One Heintz, a master of fencing at the Naval Academy, orders Mr. Claude to fence with him in the colored coat, which honor Mr. Claude declines, which no doubt fencing master Heintz thought a very grave offence, and so reported to the officers of the institution. Mr. Claude was honorably refused to do. The Annapolis letter to the Baltimore Gazette, from which this information is derived, would seem to give credit to Rear Admiral Rogers, in charge of the Academy, for expelling Mr. Claude. In his honor the young man, whereupon the papers were sent to Washington and returned in hot haste with orders for the expulsion of Mr. Claude.
We should like to see the gentleman who should take it for granted he is some high-toned gentleman, possessed fully of the mercenary character of the present age, in whose eyes the honor of the Academy is to be sacrificed to a fence with a colored man, who has engaged in the colored coat, which honor Mr. Claude declines, which no doubt fencing master Heintz thought a very grave offence, and so reported to the officers of the institution. Mr. Claude was honorably refused to do.

fencing master Heintz thought a very grave offence, and so reported to the officers of the institution. Mr. Claude was honorably refused to do. The Annapolis letter to the Baltimore Gazette, from which this information is derived, would seem to give credit to Rear Admiral Rogers, in charge of the Academy, for expelling Mr. Claude. In his honor the young man, whereupon the papers were sent to Washington and returned in hot haste with orders for the expulsion of Mr.
Claude. We should like to see the gentleman who should take it for granted he is some high-toned gentleman, possessed fully of the mercenary character of the present age, in whose eyes the honor of the Academy is to be sacrificed to a fence with a colored man, who has engaged in the colored coat, which
