

The Port Tobacco Times

AND CHARLES COUNTY ADVERTISER.

PUBLISHED AT FORT TOBACCO, MARYLAND, EVERY FRIDAY MORNING, BY COX & DALEY, EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS, AT ONE DOLLAR PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

Established in 1844.

PORT TOBACCO, MARYLAND, JANUARY 4, 1884.

Volume XL.—No. 30.

MAMMOTH OPENING

COX & DALEY
NEW YORK CITY
WE have just returned from BALTIMORE CITY with a large and complete assortment of
SPRING & SUMMER
GOODS suited to all classes of trade.

Our Cottons, Linens, Prints and Dress Goods are the best in the market. Boots, Shoes, Gaiters and Slippers for Ladies and Gentlemen, have been made expressly for custom order. Suspenders, Collars, Cuffs, and all kinds of undergarments and Caps of the latest style are ready to order.

Whipple Spring-Tooth Sinker Harrow and Corn Cultivator combined; McCormick Single Reaper Binder and Mower.

The celebrated LUTHER F. & F. PLOUGHS as well as the noted ploughs manufactured by the St. Joseph Plough Company, Milwaukee, Indiana.

The Remington Sewing Machine is also sold by us.

Should ever work from the use of any of the above machinery please you or make you any of our goods, we will sell you some of our goods at a special price.

And if you wish to see our machinery in operation, we will send you a catalogue of our goods and machinery free of charge.

Our goods are always on hand, and will be sent to you by express or by rail.

Howard Bros.

By Universal Accord, Ayer's Catarrh Pills are the best of all purgatives for family use. They are the product of long laborious, and successful chemical investigation, and their extensive use, by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, proves them the best and most efficient purgative. They are the best and safest medicine for the cure of all the diseases of the bowels, and are especially adapted to the needs of the digestive apparatus, derangements of which they prevent and cure, if timely taken. They are the best and safest medicine for the cure of children and weakened constitutions, where a mild but efficient cathartic is required.

For sale by all druggists.

PATENTS

MUNY & CO. are the only Patent Attorneys in Baltimore who have secured the right to issue Patents in all the States and Territories, and in all the foreign countries.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, NERVOUSNESS, BILIOUS AFFECTIONS, HEADACHE, CONSTIPATION, CHILLS AND FEVERS, AND ALL Diseases of the Liver and Stomach.

J. W. LAROCHE'S ANTIBILIOUS PILLS ARE THE MOST PERFECT REMEDY THAT CAN BE PREPARED.

This is a Purely Vegetable, Fruitless Family Medicine, and is the most powerful and most effective of all the remedies for the cure of Biliousness, Headache, Constipation, Chills and Fevers, and all Diseases of the Liver and Stomach.

W. H. MOORE & CO., GROCERS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 165 S. Charles St., BALTIMORE.

FINE WATCH REPAIRS
—AT TRADE PRICES—
Cleaning $1.50. Mainspring $1.50.

JOHN R. HARE, No. 63 FAYETTE ST., Opposite Harmon's Hotel, Baltimore. CHEAPEST STOCK IN THE CITY.

DANIEL E. MAGRUIER, Attorney-at-Law, No. 100 S. Charles St., Baltimore.

ESTABLISHED 1847, T. Norris & Co., No. 49 SOUTH CALVERT STREET, Baltimore, Md.

CLOCKING & HEATING STOVES
of various designs at low prices.

Our SILVER STAR COOK is the Largest, Heaviest, Best and most Durable Stove on the market.

Money To Loan.

S100,000 TO LOAN ON MORTGAGE. Apply to R. W. TRIMBLEMAN & CO., (Real Estate Agents), 27 Lexington St., Baltimore, Md.

Baltimore Advertisements.

YOU CAN SAVE Railroad Fare.

Your Expenses, and Have MONEY LEFT BY PURCHASING YOUR

Clothing, HATS & CAPS.

Boots, Shoes AND Furnishing Goods.

OF THE EXCELSIOR'S

Latest Styles AND BEST MAKES.

Manufactured AT COST.

IT WILL PAY YOU TO GO THERE.

"Excelsior" Clothing Campaign.

S. W. COR. BALTO. LIGHT STS. AND COR. EASTERN AVE. & BROADWAY.

W. H. MOORE & CO., GROCERS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, No. 165 S. Charles St., Baltimore.

FINE WATCH REPAIRS
—AT TRADE PRICES—
Cleaning $1.50. Mainspring $1.50.

JOHN R. HARE, No. 63 FAYETTE ST., Opposite Harmon's Hotel, Baltimore. CHEAPEST STOCK IN THE CITY.

DANIEL E. MAGRUIER, Attorney-at-Law, No. 100 S. Charles St., Baltimore.

ESTABLISHED 1847, T. Norris & Co., No. 49 SOUTH CALVERT STREET, Baltimore, Md.

CLOCKING & HEATING STOVES
of various designs at low prices.

Our SILVER STAR COOK is the Largest, Heaviest, Best and most Durable Stove on the market.

Money To Loan.

S100,000 TO LOAN ON MORTGAGE. Apply to R. W. TRIMBLEMAN & CO., (Real Estate Agents), 27 Lexington St., Baltimore, Md.

WOODWARD & LATHROP.

921 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C.

Great Blanket Sale

Blankets for $1.25 Per Pair.

Blankets for $1.75 Per Pair.

Blankets for $2.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $2.50 Per Pair.

Blankets for $3.50 Per Pair.

Blankets for $4.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $5.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $6.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $7.50 Per Pair.

WOODWARD & LATHROP.

921 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C.

Great Blanket Sale

Blankets for $1.25 Per Pair.

Blankets for $1.75 Per Pair.

Blankets for $2.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $2.50 Per Pair.

Blankets for $3.50 Per Pair.

Blankets for $4.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $5.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $6.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $7.50 Per Pair.

Blankets for $8.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $9.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $10.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $11.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $12.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $13.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $14.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $15.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $16.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $17.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $18.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $19.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $20.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $21.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $22.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $23.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $24.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $25.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $26.00 Per Pair.

Blankets for $27.00 Per Pair.

A Select Story.

JOHN ARMOR'S SCARE.

"A man would never snap me after that fashion more than once," said Blair, after, as it were, he had finished his breakfast, and she saw the tears coming into Mrs. Armor's eyes. "What right had John to speak to you in that manner?"

"The young wife's lips quivered, and a tear or two dropped over her cheeks. "I never dreamed of you were, Jennie," said Miss Blair, warmly, with indignation, "you'll teach John the lesson he needs to learn, and that at once. The sooner you make him understand that in marrying you did not give yourself over to a master, the better for you both."

Now, quick tempered, good hearted John Armor felt sorry for his unguarded speech the moment it left his lips, and ashamed of having spoken unkindly to his wife before a third person—As he was closing the door he heard the first indignation uttered by Miss Blair, and pausing with the door ajar, got the benefit of her further utterances.

"After a great deal of mortification, and the disturbing elements that made our young husband feel anything but comfortable as he left the house. "The hardest thing in the world for some people is to acknowledge themselves in the wrong; and of this class was John Armor. He might have gone back and made it all up with Jennie, if she had been alone; but to confess his fault before Miss Blair was not to be thought of for a moment. So he went off to his store feeling mean, miserable and angry by turns.

"Teach me a lesson," dropped from his lips as he strode along. The customer and self justifier was at his ear, trying to work evil between him and his Jennie.

"Teach me a lesson," she had best not try any experiments of that sort. "Then his good angel got audience and said: 'Is this the gentle husband, the strong true man, who was to be a cherisher? Who gave you the right to speak unkindly? To rebuke and reprove and exhort and succeed in so exasperating Mrs. Carman that in a fit of blind passion she left home and has not since returned.'"

"But the evil counselor made an angry speech, saying: 'Has a man a right to complain when met with a comfort in the possession of his own home? Is he not to speak a word of remonstrance, though everything goes wrong? There may be spiritless husbands, who will meekly submit, but John Armor is not one of them.'"

And now coming, it seemed, from a distance, far inward or upward, sounded a gentle but pleading voice, and it said: "This is not well, John Armor."

And at the words a figure grew into distinctness in his mind. He saw his Jennie—his true, and pure and loving young wife—sitting with bowed head, and sorrowful face, and wet eyes, the picture of suffering, and all because of his harsh, unkindly speech.

Almost instantly the picture faded, and a new one grew out of the confused images that remained. The form of Jennie became distinct once more; but her attitude and countenance had changed. She stood erect, with a bold unloving face, and looked into his eyes with angry defiance, and at the same time out of his memory into his thought came these words: "A woman would never snap me after that fashion more than once," said Blair, after, as it were, he had finished his breakfast, and she saw the tears coming into Mrs. Armor's eyes. "What right had John to speak to you in that manner?"

"The young wife's lips quivered, and a tear or two dropped over her cheeks. "I never dreamed of you were, Jennie," said Miss Blair, warmly, with indignation, "you'll teach John the lesson he needs to learn, and that at once. The sooner you make him understand that in marrying you did not give yourself over to a master, the better for you both."

Now, quick tempered, good hearted John Armor felt sorry for his unguarded speech the moment it left his lips, and ashamed of having spoken unkindly to his wife before a third person—As he was closing the door he heard the first indignation uttered by Miss Blair, and pausing with the door ajar, got the benefit of her further utterances.

"After a great deal of mortification, and the disturbing elements that made our young husband feel anything but comfortable as he left the house. "The hardest thing in the world for some people is to acknowledge themselves in the wrong; and of this class was John Armor. He might have gone back and made it all up with Jennie, if she had been alone; but to confess his fault before Miss Blair was not to be thought of for a moment. So he went off to his store feeling mean, miserable and angry by turns.

"Teach me a lesson," dropped from his lips as he strode along. The customer and self justifier was at his ear, trying to work evil between him and his Jennie.

"Teach me a lesson," she had best not try any experiments of that sort. "Then his good angel got audience and said: 'Is this the gentle husband, the strong true man, who was to be a cherisher? Who gave you the right to speak unkindly? To rebuke and reprove and exhort and succeed in so exasperating Mrs. Carman that in a fit of blind passion she left home and has not since returned.'"

"But the evil counselor made an angry speech, saying: 'Has a man a right to complain when met with a comfort in the possession of his own home? Is he not to speak a word of remonstrance, though everything goes wrong? There may be spiritless husbands, who will meekly submit, but John Armor is not one of them.'"

And now coming, it seemed, from a distance, far inward or upward, sounded a gentle but pleading voice, and it said: "This is not well, John Armor."

And at the words a figure grew into distinctness in his mind. He saw his Jennie—his true, and pure and loving young wife—sitting with bowed head, and sorrowful face, and wet eyes, the picture of suffering, and all because of his harsh, unkindly speech.

Almost instantly the picture faded, and a new one grew out of the confused images that remained. The form of Jennie became distinct once more; but her attitude and countenance had changed. She stood erect, with a bold unloving face, and looked into his eyes with angry defiance, and at the same time out of his memory into his thought came these words: "A woman would never snap me after that fashion more than once," said Blair, after, as it were, he had finished his breakfast, and she saw the tears coming into Mrs. Armor's eyes. "What right had John to speak to you in that manner?"

"The young wife's lips quivered, and a tear or two dropped over her cheeks. "I never dreamed of you were, Jennie," said Miss Blair, warmly, with indignation, "you'll teach John the lesson he needs to learn, and that at once. The sooner you make him understand that in marrying you did not give yourself over to a master, the better for you both."

Now, quick tempered, good hearted John Armor felt sorry for his unguarded speech the moment it left his lips, and ashamed of having spoken unkindly to his wife before a third person—As he was closing the door he heard the first indignation uttered by Miss Blair, and pausing with the door ajar, got the benefit of her further utterances.

"After a great deal of mortification, and the disturbing elements that made our young husband feel anything but comfortable as he left the house. "The hardest thing in the world for some people is to acknowledge themselves in the wrong; and of this class was John Armor. He might have gone back and made it all up with Jennie, if she had been alone; but to confess his fault before Miss Blair was not to be thought of for a moment. So he went off to his store feeling mean, miserable and angry by turns.

"Teach me a lesson," dropped from his lips as he strode along. The customer and self justifier was at his ear, trying to work evil between him and his Jennie.

"Teach me a lesson," she had best not try any experiments of that sort. "Then his good angel got audience and said: 'Is this the gentle husband, the strong true man, who was to be a cherisher? Who gave you the right to speak unkindly? To rebuke and reprove and exhort and succeed in so exasperating Mrs. Carman that in a fit of blind passion she left home and has not since returned.'"

"But the evil counselor made an angry speech, saying: 'Has a man a right to complain when met with a comfort in the possession of his own home? Is he not to speak a word of remonstrance, though everything goes wrong? There may be spiritless husbands, who will meekly submit, but John Armor is not one of them.'"

And now coming, it seemed, from a distance, far inward or upward, sounded a gentle but pleading voice, and it said: "This is not well, John Armor."

And at the words a figure grew into distinctness in his mind. He saw his Jennie—his true, and pure and loving young wife—sitting with bowed head, and sorrowful face, and wet eyes, the picture of suffering, and all because of his harsh, unkindly speech.

Almost instantly the picture faded, and a new one grew out of the confused images that remained. The form of Jennie became distinct once more; but her attitude and countenance had changed. She stood erect, with a bold unloving face, and looked into his eyes with angry defiance, and at the same time out of his memory into his thought came these words: "A woman would never snap me after that fashion more than once," said Blair, after, as it were, he had finished his breakfast, and she saw the tears coming into Mrs. Armor's eyes. "What right had John to speak to you in that manner?"

"The young wife's lips quivered, and a tear or two dropped over her cheeks. "I never dreamed of you were, Jennie," said Miss Blair, warmly, with indignation, "you'll teach John the lesson he needs to learn, and that at once. The sooner you make him understand that in marrying you did not give yourself over to a master, the better for you both."

Now, quick tempered, good hearted John Armor felt sorry for his unguarded speech the moment it left his lips, and ashamed of having spoken unkindly to his wife before a third person—As he was closing the door he heard the first indignation uttered by Miss Blair, and pausing with the door ajar, got the benefit of her further utterances.

JOHN ARMOR'S SCARE.

"A man would never snap me after that fashion more than once," said Blair, after, as it were, he had finished his breakfast, and she saw the tears coming into Mrs. Armor's eyes. "What right had John to speak to you in that manner?"

"The young wife's lips quivered, and a tear or two dropped over her cheeks. "I never dreamed of you were, Jennie," said Miss Blair, warmly, with indignation, "you'll teach John the lesson he needs to learn, and that at once. The sooner you make him understand that in marrying you did not give yourself over to a master, the better for you both."

Now, quick tempered, good hearted John Armor felt sorry for his unguarded speech the moment it left his lips, and ashamed of having spoken unkindly to his wife before a third person—As he was closing the door he heard the first indignation uttered by Miss Blair, and pausing with the door ajar, got the benefit of her further utterances.

"After a great deal of mortification, and the disturbing elements that made our young husband feel anything but comfortable as he left the house. "The hardest thing in the world for some people is to acknowledge themselves in the wrong; and of this class was John Armor. He might have gone back and made it all up with Jennie, if she had been alone; but to confess his fault before Miss Blair was not to be thought of for a moment. So he went off to his store feeling mean, miserable and angry by turns.

"Teach me a lesson," dropped from his lips as he strode along. The customer and self justifier was at his ear, trying to work evil between him and his Jennie.

"Teach me a lesson," she had best not try any experiments of that sort. "Then his good angel got audience and said: 'Is this the gentle husband, the strong true man, who was to be a cherisher? Who gave you the right to speak unkindly? To rebuke and reprove and exhort and succeed in so exasperating Mrs. Carman that in a fit of blind passion she left home and has not since returned.'"

"But the evil counselor made an angry speech, saying: 'Has a man a right to complain when met with a comfort in the possession of his own home? Is he not to speak a word of remonstrance, though everything goes wrong? There may be spiritless husbands, who will meekly submit, but John Armor is not one of them.'"

And now coming, it seemed, from a distance, far inward or upward, sounded a gentle but pleading voice, and it said: "This is not well, John Armor."

And at the words a figure grew into distinctness in his mind. He saw his Jennie—his true, and pure and loving young wife—sitting with bowed head, and sorrowful face, and wet eyes, the picture of suffering, and all because of his harsh, unkindly speech.

Almost instantly the picture faded, and a new one grew out of the confused images that remained. The form of Jennie became distinct once more; but her attitude and countenance had changed. She stood erect, with a bold unloving face, and looked into his eyes with angry defiance, and at the same time out of his memory into his thought came these words: "A woman would never snap me after that fashion more than once," said Blair, after, as it were, he had finished his breakfast, and she saw the tears coming into Mrs. Armor's eyes. "What right had John to speak to you in that manner?"

"The young wife's lips quivered, and a tear or two dropped over her cheeks. "I never dreamed of you were, Jennie," said Miss Blair, warmly, with indignation, "you'll teach John the lesson he needs to learn, and that at once. The sooner you make him understand that in marrying you did not give yourself over to a master, the better for you both."

Now, quick tempered, good hearted John Armor felt sorry for his unguarded speech the moment it left his lips, and ashamed of having spoken unkindly to his wife before a third person—As he was closing the door he heard the first indignation uttered by Miss Blair, and pausing with the door ajar, got the benefit of her further utterances.

"After a great deal of mortification, and the disturbing elements that made our young husband feel anything but comfortable as he left the house. "The hardest thing in the world for some people is to acknowledge themselves in the wrong; and of this class was John Armor. He might have gone back and made it all up with Jennie, if she had been alone; but to confess his fault before Miss Blair was not to be thought of for a moment. So he went off to his store feeling mean, miserable and angry by turns.

"Teach me a lesson," dropped from his lips as he strode along. The customer and self justifier was at his ear, trying to work evil between him and his Jennie.

"Teach me a lesson," she had best not try any experiments of that sort. "Then his good angel got audience and said: 'Is this the gentle husband, the strong true man, who was to be a cherisher? Who gave you the right to speak unkindly? To rebuke and reprove and exhort and succeed in so exasperating Mrs. Carman that in a fit of blind passion she left home and has not since returned.'"

"But the evil counselor made an angry speech, saying: 'Has a man a right to complain when met with a comfort in the possession of his own home? Is he not to speak a word of remonstrance, though everything goes wrong? There may be spiritless husbands, who will meekly submit, but John Armor is not one of them.'"

And now coming, it seemed, from a distance, far inward or upward, sounded a gentle but pleading voice, and it said: "This is not well, John Armor."

And at the words a figure grew into distinctness in his mind. He saw his Jennie—his true, and pure and loving young wife—sitting with bowed head, and sorrowful face, and wet eyes, the picture of suffering, and all because of his harsh, unkindly speech.

Almost instantly the picture faded, and a new one grew out of the confused images that remained. The form of Jennie became distinct once more; but her attitude and countenance had changed. She stood erect, with a bold unloving face, and looked into his eyes with angry defiance, and at the same time out of his memory into his thought came these words: "A woman would never snap me after that fashion more than once," said Blair, after, as it were, he had finished his breakfast, and she saw the tears coming into Mrs. Armor's eyes. "What right had John to speak to you in that manner?"

"The young wife's lips quivered, and a tear or two dropped over her cheeks. "I never dreamed of you were, Jennie," said Miss Blair, warmly, with indignation, "you'll teach John the lesson he needs to learn, and that at once. The sooner you make him understand that in marrying you did not give yourself over to a master, the better for you both."

Now, quick tempered, good hearted John Armor felt sorry for his unguarded speech the moment it left his lips, and ashamed of having spoken unkindly to his wife before a third person—As he was closing the door he heard the first indignation uttered by Miss Blair, and pausing with the door ajar, got the benefit of her further utterances.

"After a great deal of mortification, and the disturbing elements that made our young husband feel anything but comfortable as he left the house. "The hardest thing in the world for some people is to acknowledge themselves in the wrong; and of this class was John Armor. He might have gone back and made it all up with Jennie, if she had been alone; but to confess his fault before Miss Blair was not to be thought of for a moment. So he went off to his store feeling mean, miserable and angry by turns.

"Teach me a lesson," dropped from his lips as he strode along. The customer and self justifier was at his ear, trying to work evil between him and his Jennie.

"Teach me a lesson," she had best not try any experiments of that sort. "Then his good angel got audience and said: 'Is this the gentle husband, the strong true man, who was to be a cherisher? Who gave you the right to speak unkindly? To rebuke and reprove and exhort and succeed in so exasperating Mrs. Carman that in a fit of blind passion she left home and has not since returned.'"

"But the evil counselor made an angry speech, saying: 'Has a man a right to complain when met with a comfort in the possession of his own home? Is he not to speak a word of remonstrance, though everything goes wrong? There may be spiritless husbands, who will meekly submit, but John Armor is not one of them.'"

And now coming, it seemed, from a distance, far inward or upward, sounded a gentle but pleading voice, and it said: "This is not well, John Armor."

And at the words a figure grew into distinctness in his mind. He saw his Jennie—his true, and pure and loving young wife—sitting with bowed head, and sorrowful face, and wet eyes, the picture of suffering, and all because of his harsh, unkindly speech.

Almost instantly the picture faded, and a new one grew out of the confused images that remained. The form of Jennie became distinct once more; but her attitude and countenance had changed. She stood erect, with a bold unloving face, and looked into his eyes with angry defiance, and at the same time out of his memory into his thought came these words: "A woman would never snap me after that fashion more than once," said Blair, after, as it were, he had finished his breakfast, and she saw the tears coming into Mrs. Armor's eyes. "What right had John to speak to you in that manner?"

"The young wife's lips quivered, and a tear or two dropped over her cheeks. "I never dreamed of you were, Jennie," said Miss Blair, warmly, with indignation, "you'll teach John the lesson he needs to learn, and that at once. The sooner you make him understand that in marrying you did not give yourself over to a master, the better for you both."

Now, quick tempered, good hearted John Armor felt sorry for his unguarded speech the moment it left his lips, and ashamed of having spoken unkindly to his wife before a third person—As he was closing the door he heard the first indignation uttered by Miss Blair, and pausing with the door ajar, got the benefit of her further utterances.

"After a great deal of mortification, and the disturbing elements that made our young husband feel anything but comfortable as he left the house. "The hardest thing in the world for some people is to acknowledge themselves in the wrong; and of this class was John Armor. He might have gone back and made it all up with Jennie, if she had been alone; but to confess his fault before Miss Blair was not to be thought of for a moment. So he went off to his store feeling mean, miserable and angry by turns.

JOHN ARMOR'S SCARE.

"A man would never snap me after that fashion more than once," said Blair, after, as it were, he had finished his breakfast, and she saw the tears coming into Mrs. Armor's eyes. "What right had John to speak to you in that manner?"

"The young wife's lips quivered, and a tear or two dropped over her cheeks. "I never dreamed of you were, Jennie," said Miss Blair, warmly, with indignation, "you'll teach John the lesson he needs to learn, and that at once. The sooner you make him understand that in marrying you did not give yourself over to a master, the better for you both."

Now, quick tempered, good hearted John Armor felt sorry for his unguarded speech the moment it left his lips, and ashamed of having spoken unkindly to his wife before a third person—As he was closing the door he heard the first indignation uttered by Miss Blair, and pausing with the door ajar, got the benefit of her further utterances.

"After a great deal of mortification, and the disturbing elements that made our young husband feel anything but comfortable as he left the house. "The hardest thing in the world for some people is to acknowledge themselves in the wrong; and of this class was John Armor. He might have gone back and made it all up with Jennie, if she had been alone; but to confess his fault before Miss Blair was not to be thought of for a moment. So he went off to his store feeling mean, miserable and angry by turns.

"Teach me a lesson," dropped from his lips as he strode along. The customer and self justifier was at his ear, trying to work evil between him and his Jennie.

"Teach me a lesson," she had best not try any experiments of that sort. "Then his good angel got audience and said: 'Is this the gentle husband, the strong true man, who was to be a cherisher? Who gave you the right to speak unkindly? To rebuke and reprove and exhort and succeed in so exasperating Mrs. Carman that in a fit of blind passion she left home and has not since returned.'"

</