

The Port Tobacco Times

AND CHARLES COUNTY ADVERTISER.

PUBLISHED AT PORT TOBACCO, MARYLAND, EVERY FRIDAY MORNING, BY COX & DALEY, EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS, AT ONE DOLLAR PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

Established in 1844.

PORT TOBACCO, MARYLAND, JANUARY 25, 1884.

Volume XL--No. 33.

THE SUN,
Published daily except Sunday.
THE PAPER OF THE PEOPLE.
Terms of Subscription by Mail, Invariably Cash in Advance—Postage Free:
One year, $5.00 (One Month, 50 cts.)
Six Months, 3.00 (Three Weeks, 35 cts.)
Four Months, 2.00 (Two Weeks, 25 cts.)
Three Months, 1.50 (One Week, 15 cts.)
Two Months, 1.00
SINGLE COPY 5c by mail, 3 cts.
THE BALTIMORE WEEKLY SUN.
A Newspaper giving a week's events in compact shape.
$1.00 BALTIMORE WEEKLY SUN. $1.00
TERMS—Invariably Cash in Advance. Postage Free to all Subscribers in the United States and Canada.
One Dollar a Copy for Twelve Months.
1884. PREMIUM COPIES TO GETTERS UP OF CLUBS FOR THE "BALTIMORE WEEKLY SUN"
FIVE COPIES.....$ 5.00
With an extra copy of the Weekly Sun one year.
TEN COPIES.....10.00
With an extra copy of the Weekly Sun one year, and one copy of the Daily Sun three months.
FIFTEEN COPIES.....15.00
With an extra copy of the Weekly Sun one year, and one copy of the Daily Sun six months.
TWENTY COPIES.....20.00
With an extra copy of the Weekly Sun one year, and one copy of the Daily Sun nine months.
THIRTY COPIES.....30.00
With an extra copy of the Weekly Sun one year, and one copy of the Daily Sun one year.
SINGLE COPIES by mail.....5 cts.
Getters up of Clubs will find the above terms the most liberal that can be offered by a First-Class Family Journal.
The safest method of transmitting money by mail is by check, draft or postal note money order.
No deviation from the published terms.
Address: A. S. ABLE, Publisher, Baltimore, Md.

Baltimore Advertisements.
YOU CAN SAVE Railroad Fare.
Your Expenses, and Have MONEY LEFT—BY—PURCHASING YOUR Clothing, HATS & CAPS, Boots, Shoes AND Furnishing Goods.
OF THE EXCELSIOR'S Baltimore.
All Goods of the Latest Styles AND BEST MAKES, AT Manufacturers' COST.
IT WILL PAY YOU TO GO THERE.
"Excelsior" Clothing Company,
S. W. COR. BALTO. LIGHT STS. AND COR. EASTERN AVE. & BROADWAY.
Jno. H. Fowler. Robt. S. Fowler.
BLAIR, FULWEL & COMPANY GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS
No. 106 S. Charles Street, Baltimore.

Woodward & Lothrop.
A Select Story.
AN AWKWARD FIX.
921 Pennsylvania Ave., 912 D Street, Washington, D. C.
Grand Closing-Out Sale—PREVIOUS TO OUR—Semi-Annual Stock Taking.
Remnants, Short Lengths, Odds and Ends, Odd Sizes, etc., etc.
all of which have been very much reduced in price in order to clear them out before the last of February.
We call special attention to the following list from our HOUSEKEEPING DEPARTMENT on which we quote—
—LOWEST PRICES KNOWN FOR YEARS—
25 Dozen German Linen Napkins, extra quality and finish, actually worth $1.25 only $1.00 a dozen to close.
100 Dozen German Linen Napkins, extra quality, worth $1.75, only $1.35 a dozen to close.
50 Dozen German Linen Napkins, full size superior quality, only $3.50 per dozen.
50 Dozen All Linen Colored Border Doilies, only 60 cents per dozen.
—TABLE DAMASK—
Unbleached Loom Damask 2 1/2 yds long, 46" & 50" wide, extra quality, all sizes, 40c & 50c per yard.
Bleached Damask, 2 1/2 yds long, 46" & 50" wide, extra quality, only 62c per yard.
Special Bargain extra quality, 60 yds wide, only $1.40 per yard superior quality.
Burgundy Damask 2 1/2 yds long, 46" & 50" wide, only 75 cents per yard.
Turkey Red Damask, full color, 50c per yd.
Cardinal Damask, extra quality, only 75c per yd.
—DINNER SETS—
Cloth—2 1/2 yds long, 46" & 50" wide, $4.50
Napkins to match, $10.00 per set.
—BARGAINS IN TOWELS—
$1.00 Doz. Kitchen Towels, 2 1/2 yds long, 12" wide, 25c each.
25 Doz. Towels to wash all Linen, Border, Fine and Heavy 2 1/2 yds wide, 1 Only 12c each.
25 doz. Fancy Towels, Extra Quality, Size 21x42, Only 17c each.
—BARGAINS IN QUILTS—
We are offering for a short time only a limited quantity of extra Marcellus Quilts, 11-4, Fringed Quilts, from $1.25 to $2.50 each.
—OUR STOCK OF LINEN—
WASHER AND TOWELLING:
Superior Quality, 2 1/2 yds long, 46" & 50" wide, in order to clear out the old stock, we are making some VERY LOW PRICES.
Brown Scotch Check, 46" wide, 1 1/2 yds long, 17c per yard.
Linen, 17 inches, 1 1/2 yds long, 17c per yard.
1 1/2 yds long, 17c per yard.
Half Size of GENUINE RUSSIA CLOTH, 9 and 11 inches per yard.
Fine Scotch Bleached Cloth, 1 1/2 yds long, 17c per yard.
Close buy of plain, GLASS TOWELLING of our own manufacturing, extra quality, according to the market, from 12c to 25c per yard, according to width.
Extra Wide—27 inches—only 20c per yard.
—SUPERIOR QUALITY LINEN HUCK—
1 1/2 yds long, from 25 to 35 cents.
—LOWEST PRICES—
EVER NAMED FOR SHEETINGS—
4-4 Brown Cotton, only 7c per yard, extra quality 8c.
Bleached Shirting, 46" wide, 1 1/2 yds long, 9c per yard.
Dwight Arrow, 46" wide, 1 1/2 yds long, 10c per yard.
10-4 Sheeting, Good Quality, 2 1/2 yds long, 25c per yard, Bleached and Brown.
The Best Goods Ever offered at the Same Money.
—BARGAINS IN TICKINGS—
Fancy Tickings, Superior Quality, only 12c per yard, 30 inches wide.
Extra Heavy Tickings, 32 inches, 15c per yard, Feather Proof 18c.
Extra Fine 44 18c.
—ONE-HALF SIZE WHITE DOMEST FLANNEL only 12c.
One size gray lined Flannel only 15c.
Red Twilled Shaker Flannel 25c, 26c, 27c.

giving his ideas on worms, and Doctor Lewis, bag in hand, advanced immediately to the place he had vacated before the table.
"Gentlemen," he began, with a gravity suitable to the dignity of his subject, "I shall now ask you to listen to a few remarks I have written on the subject of antediluvian fossils."
As he spoke the doctor opened his bag, and in full view of the circle of spectators, drew therefrom an elaborately embroidered baby's bib! Yes—there was no disguising it—no amount of imagination could transform this, in the circumstances, most startling article into anything like the fossil it ought to have been; and, utterly bewildered, without daring to glance at his amazed colleagues, Doctor Lewis helplessly laid the bib on the table, and drew forth a pair of pale blue socks.
At this a decided murmur went round the table, which, issuing from any other than such learned and dignified lips, would certainly have much more effect. Doctor Lewis, however, was not to be deterred. He laid the bib on the table, and drew forth a pair of pale blue socks.
"Oh, Harry, Harry!" cried the mother in horror and consternation, vainly doing her best to force the child to let go his hold. "I beg ten thousand pardons, sir, I must have been very careless."
"Don't make yourself uneasy, madam," replied Doctor Lewis smiling. "I am fond of children and really feel quite flattered at this fine little fellow's notice. Perhaps he may find my umbrella as attractive as my beard."
As he spoke, the gentleman offered for the child's inspection an umbrella adorned with a shining silver handle, to which the child immediately transferred his attention, striving for several minutes, with an energy worthy of a better cause, to swallow his new plaything. The lady tried in vain to tempt the child to leave his new acquaintance; but such shrill screams attended any attempt with this object in view that she gave it up in despair. "I believe," Doctor Lewis kindly assured her, "that the baby was not troubling him in the least. This, by the way, was not the polite fiction usually resorted to in such a case. For the old gentleman was strangely attracted towards the rosy, laughing boy gazing up into his face with big confident dark eyes, in whose eyes lay some unaccountable fascination for him."
"You evidently have plenty of children or grandchildren at home," smiled the mother. "It is easy to see that you are accustomed to children; Harry doesn't often take so readily to a stranger."
"No, madam," replied the gentleman, a little sadly. "I know unaccountably very little of children. I lost my only child sixteen years ago, when I lived in New Orleans. His name was Harry too, and he had eyes very like your little one's here."
"Yes, that was the charm in Baby Harry's eyes, which Doctor Lewis realized only as he spoke of his long lost child; and for a few moments the old man was lost in painful retrospection of the great sorrow and remorse of his life—the sternness, which he now magnified into cruelty, which had driven his high spirited motherly boy of sixteen to leave his father's house one night when too heavily punished for some boyish escapade, never to return. It was supposed he had gone to sea; but, as no sailing had ever been heard of him, his father had long since given him up as dead, in all the long years which had passed, however, he had never forgiven himself for being what he morally called the destroyer of his own child.
"You live in Philadelphia, madam?" Doctor Lewis asked, when Harry had at last been induced by the bribe of an orange to return to his mother's arms.
"Oh, no, sir," was the reply. "Our home is in California. We are visiting now in New York, and Harry and I are going to my cousin's wedding in New York, and will be at the station, if possible."
"Doctor Lewis found Harry's bright, pretty young mother quite as entertaining as her child, and his journey that morning was a much pleasanter affair than he usually found such a trip. Harry's father was not at the station; so Doctor Lewis established the mother, with her baby and a small valise, in a carriage, and, after expressing sincere wishes for another meeting rather regretfully saw the carriage drive away, while he was left standing alone on the pavement.
"The day was still young, and, after taking an early dinner at a restaurant, Doctor Lewis valise in hand, forthwith went into his business, which had brought him to Philadelphia—a weekly meeting of a society of geologists and naturalists, these branches of science being Doctor Lewis' hobbies. For weeks he had been busily engaged preparing a paper on fossils, which he was to lay before the society, and this, with reports and other papers of interest to the society, of which he was secretary, formed the contents of the small leather traveling bag he had brought with him. The meeting that afternoon was preliminary to the official one in the evening, and there Dr. Lewis was to read the paper which had caused him such profound study to a few kindred spirits before bestowing the precious gift upon the public.
About a dozen elderly gentlemen were present when he entered the room, and very soon Doctor Lewis was called upon to contribute his share to the evening's programme. A long noed, solemn naturalist had just been giving his ideas on worms, and Doctor Lewis, bag in hand, advanced immediately to the place he had vacated before the table.

"Gentlemen," he began, with a gravity suitable to the dignity of his subject, "I shall now ask you to listen to a few remarks I have written on the subject of antediluvian fossils."
As he spoke the doctor opened his bag, and in full view of the circle of spectators, drew therefrom an elaborately embroidered baby's bib! Yes—there was no disguising it—no amount of imagination could transform this, in the circumstances, most startling article into anything like the fossil it ought to have been; and, utterly bewildered, without daring to glance at his amazed colleagues, Doctor Lewis helplessly laid the bib on the table, and drew forth a pair of pale blue socks.
At this a decided murmur went round the table, which, issuing from any other than such learned and dignified lips, would certainly have much more effect. Doctor Lewis, however, was not to be deterred. He laid the bib on the table, and drew forth a pair of pale blue socks.
"Oh, Harry, Harry!" cried the mother in horror and consternation, vainly doing her best to force the child to let go his hold. "I beg ten thousand pardons, sir, I must have been very careless."
"Don't make yourself uneasy, madam," replied Doctor Lewis smiling. "I am fond of children and really feel quite flattered at this fine little fellow's notice. Perhaps he may find my umbrella as attractive as my beard."
As he spoke, the gentleman offered for the child's inspection an umbrella adorned with a shining silver handle, to which the child immediately transferred his attention, striving for several minutes, with an energy worthy of a better cause, to swallow his new plaything. The lady tried in vain to tempt the child to leave his new acquaintance; but such shrill screams attended any attempt with this object in view that she gave it up in despair. "I believe," Doctor Lewis kindly assured her, "that the baby was not troubling him in the least. This, by the way, was not the polite fiction usually resorted to in such a case. For the old gentleman was strangely attracted towards the rosy, laughing boy gazing up into his face with big confident dark eyes, in whose eyes lay some unaccountable fascination for him."
"You evidently have plenty of children or grandchildren at home," smiled the mother. "It is easy to see that you are accustomed to children; Harry doesn't often take so readily to a stranger."
"No, madam," replied the gentleman, a little sadly. "I know unaccountably very little of children. I lost my only child sixteen years ago, when I lived in New Orleans. His name was Harry too, and he had eyes very like your little one's here."
"Yes, that was the charm in Baby Harry's eyes, which Doctor Lewis realized only as he spoke of his long lost child; and for a few moments the old man was lost in painful retrospection of the great sorrow and remorse of his life—the sternness, which he now magnified into cruelty, which had driven his high spirited motherly boy of sixteen to leave his father's house one night when too heavily punished for some boyish escapade, never to return. It was supposed he had gone to sea; but, as no sailing had ever been heard of him, his father had long since given him up as dead, in all the long years which had passed, however, he had never forgiven himself for being what he morally called the destroyer of his own child.
"You live in Philadelphia, madam?" Doctor Lewis asked, when Harry had at last been induced by the bribe of an orange to return to his mother's arms.
"Oh, no, sir," was the reply. "Our home is in California. We are visiting now in New York, and Harry and I are going to my cousin's wedding in New York, and will be at the station, if possible."
"Doctor Lewis found Harry's bright, pretty young mother quite as entertaining as her child, and his journey that morning was a much pleasanter affair than he usually found such a trip. Harry's father was not at the station; so Doctor Lewis established the mother, with her baby and a small valise, in a carriage, and, after expressing sincere wishes for another meeting rather regretfully saw the carriage drive away, while he was left standing alone on the pavement.
"The day was still young, and, after taking an early dinner at a restaurant, Doctor Lewis valise in hand, forthwith went into his business, which had brought him to Philadelphia—a weekly meeting of a society of geologists and naturalists, these branches of science being Doctor Lewis' hobbies. For weeks he had been busily engaged preparing a paper on fossils, which he was to lay before the society, and this, with reports and other papers of interest to the society, of which he was secretary, formed the contents of the small leather traveling bag he had brought with him. The meeting that afternoon was preliminary to the official one in the evening, and there Dr. Lewis was to read the paper which had caused him such profound study to a few kindred spirits before bestowing the precious gift upon the public.
About a dozen elderly gentlemen were present when he entered the room, and very soon Doctor Lewis was called upon to contribute his share to the evening's programme. A long noed, solemn naturalist had just been giving his ideas on worms, and Doctor Lewis, bag in hand, advanced immediately to the place he had vacated before the table.

"Gentlemen," he began, with a gravity suitable to the dignity of his subject, "I shall now ask you to listen to a few remarks I have written on the subject of antediluvian fossils."
As he spoke the doctor opened his bag, and in full view of the circle of spectators, drew therefrom an elaborately embroidered baby's bib! Yes—there was no disguising it—no amount of imagination could transform this, in the circumstances, most startling article into anything like the fossil it ought to have been; and, utterly bewildered, without daring to glance at his amazed colleagues, Doctor Lewis helplessly laid the bib on the table, and drew forth a pair of pale blue socks.
At this a decided murmur went round the table, which, issuing from any other than such learned and dignified lips, would certainly have much more effect. Doctor Lewis, however, was not to be deterred. He laid the bib on the table, and drew forth a pair of pale blue socks.
"Oh, Harry, Harry!" cried the mother in horror and consternation, vainly doing her best to force the child to let go his hold. "I beg ten thousand pardons, sir, I must have been very careless."
"Don't make yourself uneasy, madam," replied Doctor Lewis smiling. "I am fond of children and really feel quite flattered at this fine little fellow's notice. Perhaps he may find my umbrella as attractive as my beard."
As he spoke, the gentleman offered for the child's inspection an umbrella adorned with a shining silver handle, to which the child immediately transferred his attention, striving for several minutes, with an energy worthy of a better cause, to swallow his new plaything. The lady tried in vain to tempt the child to leave his new acquaintance; but such shrill screams attended any attempt with this object in view that she gave it up in despair. "I believe," Doctor Lewis kindly assured her, "that the baby was not troubling him in the least. This, by the way, was not the polite fiction usually resorted to in such a case. For the old gentleman was strangely attracted towards the rosy, laughing boy gazing up into his face with big confident dark eyes, in whose eyes lay some unaccountable fascination for him."
"You evidently have plenty of children or grandchildren at home," smiled the mother. "It is easy to see that you are accustomed to children; Harry doesn't often take so readily to a stranger."
"No, madam," replied the gentleman, a little sadly. "I know unaccountably very little of children. I lost my only child sixteen years ago, when I lived in New Orleans. His name was Harry too, and he had eyes very like your little one's here."
"Yes, that was the charm in Baby Harry's eyes, which Doctor Lewis realized only as he spoke of his long lost child; and for a few moments the old man was lost in painful retrospection of the great sorrow and remorse of his life—the sternness, which he now magnified into cruelty, which had driven his high spirited motherly boy of sixteen to leave his father's house one night when too heavily punished for some boyish escapade, never to return. It was supposed he had gone to sea; but, as no sailing had ever been heard of him, his father had long since given him up as dead, in all the long years which had passed, however, he had never forgiven himself for being what he morally called the destroyer of his own child.
"You live in Philadelphia, madam?" Doctor Lewis asked, when Harry had at last been induced by the bribe of an orange to return to his mother's arms.
"Oh, no, sir," was the reply. "Our home is in California. We are visiting now in New York, and Harry and I are going to my cousin's wedding in New York, and will be at the station, if possible."
"Doctor Lewis found Harry's bright, pretty young mother quite as entertaining as her child, and his journey that morning was a much pleasanter affair than he usually found such a trip. Harry's father was not at the station; so Doctor Lewis established the mother, with her baby and a small valise, in a carriage, and, after expressing sincere wishes for another meeting rather regretfully saw the carriage drive away, while he was left standing alone on the pavement.
"The day was still young, and, after taking an early dinner at a restaurant, Doctor Lewis valise in hand, forthwith went into his business, which had brought him to Philadelphia—a weekly meeting of a society of geologists and naturalists, these branches of science being Doctor Lewis' hobbies. For weeks he had been busily engaged preparing a paper on fossils, which he was to lay before the society, and this, with reports and other papers of interest to the society, of which he was secretary, formed the contents of the small leather traveling bag he had brought with him. The meeting that afternoon was preliminary to the official one in the evening, and there Dr. Lewis was to read the paper which had caused him such profound study to a few kindred spirits before bestowing the precious gift upon the public.
About a dozen elderly gentlemen were present when he entered the room, and very soon Doctor Lewis was called upon to contribute his share to the evening's programme. A long noed, solemn naturalist had just been giving his ideas on worms, and Doctor Lewis, bag in hand, advanced immediately to the place he had vacated before the table.

"Gentlemen," he began, with a gravity suitable to the dignity of his subject, "I shall now ask you to listen to a few remarks I have written on the subject of antediluvian fossils."
As he spoke the doctor opened his bag, and in full view of the circle of spectators, drew therefrom an elaborately embroidered baby's bib! Yes—there was no disguising it—no amount of imagination could transform this, in the circumstances, most startling article into anything like the fossil it ought to have been; and, utterly bewildered, without daring to glance at his amazed colleagues, Doctor Lewis helplessly laid the bib on the table, and drew forth a pair of pale blue socks.
At this a decided murmur went round the table, which, issuing from any other than such learned and dignified lips, would certainly have much more effect. Doctor Lewis, however, was not to be deterred. He laid the bib on the table, and drew forth a pair of pale blue socks.
"Oh, Harry, Harry!" cried the mother in horror and consternation, vainly doing her best to force the child to let go his hold. "I beg ten thousand pardons, sir, I must have been very careless."
"Don't make yourself uneasy, madam," replied Doctor Lewis smiling. "I am fond of children and really feel quite flattered at this fine little fellow's notice. Perhaps he may find my umbrella as attractive as my beard."
As he spoke, the gentleman offered for the child's inspection an umbrella adorned with a shining silver handle, to which the child immediately transferred his attention, striving for several minutes, with an energy worthy of a better cause, to swallow his new plaything. The lady tried in vain to tempt the child to leave his new acquaintance; but such shrill screams attended any attempt with this object in view that she gave it up in despair. "I believe," Doctor Lewis kindly assured her, "that the baby was not troubling him in the least. This, by the way, was not the polite fiction usually resorted to in such a case. For the old gentleman was strangely attracted towards the rosy, laughing boy gazing up into his face with big confident dark eyes, in whose eyes lay some unaccountable fascination for him."
"You evidently have plenty of children or grandchildren at home," smiled the mother. "It is easy to see that you are accustomed to children; Harry doesn't often take so readily to a stranger."
"No, madam," replied the gentleman, a little sadly. "I know unaccountably very little of children. I lost my only child sixteen years ago, when I lived in New Orleans. His name was Harry too, and he had eyes very like your little one's here."
"Yes, that was the charm in Baby Harry's eyes, which Doctor Lewis realized only as he spoke of his long lost child; and for a few moments the old man was lost in painful retrospection of the great sorrow and remorse of his life—the sternness, which he now magnified into cruelty, which had driven his high spirited motherly boy of sixteen to leave his father's house one night when too heavily punished for some boyish escapade, never to return. It was supposed he had gone to sea; but, as no sailing had ever been heard of him, his father had long since given him up as dead, in all the long years which had passed, however, he had never forgiven himself for being what he morally called the destroyer of his own child.
"You live in Philadelphia, madam?" Doctor Lewis asked, when Harry had at last been induced by the bribe of an orange to return to his mother's arms.
"Oh, no, sir," was the reply. "Our home is in California. We are visiting now in New York, and Harry and I are going to my cousin's wedding in New York, and will be at the station, if possible."
"Doctor Lewis found Harry's bright, pretty young mother quite as entertaining as her child, and his journey that morning was a much pleasanter affair than he usually found such a trip. Harry's father was not at the station; so Doctor Lewis established the mother, with her baby and a small valise, in a carriage, and, after expressing sincere wishes for another meeting rather regretfully saw the carriage drive away, while he was left standing alone on the pavement.
"The day was still young, and, after taking an early dinner at a restaurant, Doctor Lewis valise in hand, forthwith went into his business, which had brought him to Philadelphia—a weekly meeting of a society of geologists and naturalists, these branches of science being Doctor Lewis' hobbies. For weeks he had been busily engaged preparing a paper on fossils, which he was to lay before the society, and this, with reports and other papers of interest to the society, of which he was secretary, formed the contents of the small leather traveling bag he had brought with him. The meeting that afternoon was preliminary to the official one in the evening, and there Dr. Lewis was to read the paper which had caused him such profound study to a few kindred spirits before bestowing the precious gift upon the public.
About a dozen elderly gentlemen were present when he entered the room, and very soon Doctor Lewis was called upon to contribute his share to the evening's programme. A long noed, solemn naturalist had just been giving his ideas on worms, and Doctor Lewis, bag in hand, advanced immediately to the place he had vacated before the table.

"Gentlemen," he began, with a gravity suitable to the dignity of his subject, "I shall now ask you to listen to a few remarks I have written on the subject of antediluvian fossils."
As he spoke the doctor opened his bag, and in full view of the circle of spectators, drew therefrom an elaborately embroidered baby's bib! Yes—there was no disguising it—no amount of imagination could transform this, in the circumstances, most startling article into anything like the fossil it ought to have been; and, utterly bewildered, without daring to glance at his amazed colleagues, Doctor Lewis helplessly laid the bib on the table, and drew forth a pair of pale blue socks.
At this a decided murmur went round the table, which, issuing from any other than such learned and dignified lips, would certainly have much more effect. Doctor Lewis, however, was not to be deterred. He laid the bib on the table, and drew forth a pair of pale blue socks.
"Oh, Harry, Harry!" cried the mother in horror and consternation, vainly doing her best to force the child to let go his hold. "I beg ten thousand pardons, sir, I must have been very careless."
"Don't make yourself uneasy, madam," replied Doctor Lewis smiling. "I am fond of children and really feel quite flattered at this fine little fellow's notice. Perhaps he may find my umbrella as attractive as my beard."
As he spoke, the gentleman offered for the child's inspection an umbrella adorned with a shining silver handle, to which the child immediately transferred his attention, striving for several minutes, with an energy worthy of a better cause, to swallow his new plaything. The lady tried in vain to tempt the child to leave his new acquaintance; but such shrill screams attended any attempt with this object in view that she gave it up in despair. "I believe," Doctor Lewis kindly assured her, "that the baby was not troubling him in the least. This, by the way, was not the polite fiction usually resorted to in such a case. For the old gentleman was strangely attracted towards the rosy, laughing boy gazing up into his face with big confident dark eyes, in whose eyes lay some unaccountable fascination for him."
"You evidently have plenty of children or grandchildren at home," smiled the mother. "It is easy to see that you are accustomed to children; Harry doesn't often take so readily to a stranger."
"No, madam," replied the gentleman, a little sadly. "I know unaccountably very little of children. I lost my only child sixteen years ago, when I lived in New Orleans. His name was Harry too, and he had eyes very like your little one's here."
"Yes, that was the charm in Baby Harry's eyes, which Doctor Lewis realized only as he spoke of his long lost child; and for a few moments the old man was lost in painful retrospection of the great sorrow and remorse of his life—the sternness, which he now magnified into cruelty, which had driven his high spirited motherly boy of sixteen to leave his father's house one night when too heavily punished for some boyish escapade, never to return. It was supposed he had gone to sea; but, as no sailing had ever been heard of him, his father had long since given him up as dead, in all the long years which had passed, however, he had never forgiven himself for being what he morally called the destroyer of his own child.
"You live in Philadelphia, madam?" Doctor Lewis asked, when Harry had at last been induced by the bribe of an orange to return to his mother's arms.
"Oh, no, sir," was the reply. "Our home is in California. We are visiting now in New York, and Harry and I are going to my cousin's wedding in New York, and will be at the station, if possible."
"Doctor Lewis found Harry's bright, pretty young mother quite as entertaining as her child, and his journey that morning was a much pleasanter affair than he usually found such a trip. Harry's father was not at the station; so Doctor Lewis established the mother, with her baby and a small valise, in a carriage, and, after expressing sincere wishes for another meeting rather regretfully saw the carriage drive away, while he was left standing alone on the pavement.
"The day was still young, and, after taking an early dinner at a restaurant, Doctor Lewis valise in hand, forthwith went into his business, which had brought him to Philadelphia—a weekly meeting of a society of geologists and naturalists, these branches of science being Doctor Lewis' hobbies. For weeks he had been busily engaged preparing a paper on fossils, which he was to lay before the society, and this, with reports and other papers of interest to the society, of which he was secretary, formed the contents of the small leather traveling bag he had brought with him. The meeting that afternoon was preliminary to the official one in the evening, and there Dr. Lewis was to read the paper which had caused him such profound study to a few kindred spirits before bestowing the precious gift upon the public.
About a dozen elderly gentlemen were present when he entered the room, and very soon Doctor Lewis was called upon to contribute his share to the evening's programme. A long noed, solemn naturalist had just been

PATENTS
MUNN & CO. OF THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, continue to act as Solicitors for Patents, Caveats, Trade Marks, &c., in the United States, Canada, England, &c. They have a large staff of experienced writers, and their facilities for securing patents are the largest, best, and most complete in the world. Special attention is given to the preparation of specifications and claims, and to the prosecution of cases before the Patent Office. Their office is at No. 57 Broadway, New York.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, NERVOUSNESS, BILIOUS ATTACKS, HEADACHE, COSTIVENESS, CHILLS AND FEVERS, AND ALL Diseases of the Liver and Stomach.
J. M. LABOQUE'S ANTI-BILIOUS BITTERS
ARE DECIDEDLY The Most Potent Remedy that Can be Used.
It is a Purely Vegetable, Painless Family Remedy, and is Manufactured at LABOQUE'S PHARMACY, one of the most prominent Drug Stores in Baltimore, for more than half a century. Its efficiency in all forms of Liver Disease has been demonstrated by thousands of the most prominent citizens of Baltimore, who have been cured of their ailments by its use. It is especially recommended in all cases of Biliousness, Headache, Constipation, &c., and in all cases of Indigestion, where it will make a permanent cure. It is a safe and reliable remedy, and is sold by all Druggists.

W. H. MOORE & CO., GROCERS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
No. 105 S. Charles St., BALTIMORE.
Particular attention given to the sale of all kinds of TOBACCO, the sale of GRAIN and all kinds of COUNTRY PRODUCE, &c.
FINE WATCH REPAIRS
—AT TRADE PRICES—
Cleaning $1.50. Mainspring $1.50.
Warranted for one year by the English Watchmaker.
JOHN R. HARE,
No. 63 FAYETTE ST.
Opposite Barron's Hotel, Baltimore.
CHEAPEST STOCK IN THE CITY.
de 17-17.

DANIEL R. MAGRUDER,
[LAWYER OF COLOR OF APPEALS]
Attorney-at-Law.
Prince Frederick, (Prince Geo.)
WILL practice in the Court of Appeals and in the Courts of Chancery, Circuit, Anne Arundel, Prince George's and St. Mary's counties, which he will attend regularly. Office and Address—ANNAPOIS, Md. m 5.

Special Notice.
Steam Saw and Grist Mill,
Near La Plata Station,
ON THE BALTO. & POTOMAC RAILROAD.
I AM now prepared to furnish all kinds of BUILDING MATERIAL, POST AND RAIL, and MILLINGS for FENCES, HOGSHEAD SIDING, HEADS and HOOPS; also HOGSHEADS already set up. The above can be obtained either at my Mill or from T. R. FARRALL, at La Plata Station, at greatly reduced prices. Grinding day, Saturdays.
jan 12-17. JOHN HOFFMAN

COOKING & HEATING STOVES
of the latest designs at low prices.
Our SILVER STAR COOK is the Largest, Healthiest, Best and Most Durable Stove on the market.
Money To Loan.
$100,000 TO LOAN ON MORTGAGE IN MARYLAND FARMS. Apply to R. W. TIMMELEMAN & CO. (Real Estate Agents)
2617 27 Lexington St., Baltimore, Md.

WILLIAM H. HAMPTON, one clerked in a St. Louis hardware store in the daytime, and spent the greater portion of the night in brooding over the woes with which his life was fraught. He once contracted the painful habit of sending to the store for everything, from a tack hammer to a refrigerator, and having them charged to his account; thus, when pay day arrived, the cashier always had to hunt around for a nickel to pay him off with.
At last he rebelled, sought the presence of the landlady, and said, earnestly:
"Mrs. Smith, on divers occasions I have helped you out of the sea of adversity and loaned you my umbrella, asking no thanks; I've fished your child out of the well twice, and the latter rewarded me by playing horse with my pig hat; playing horse is an innocent game, and a refrigerator doesn't make much of a charger, and it is up to look rather dejected and sorrowful when a family has sat upon it for an hour."
"I've never murmured, when in the mornings I found that the servant left my face on the back of a chair; I was calm and composed when your child fastened a bucket of mud over the doorway, and I caught it on my head; and I controlled my rising passions when the same innocent prattler emptied the contents of a gallon syringe in my eye."
"I've smiled in the midst of affliction, and governed my wrath when your husband wore my shirt for three weeks; but when you furnish a house and provide your poor relations with household utensils at my expense, all the time feeding me upon fried liver, my soul revolts, and I assume the garb of assure you, Mrs. Smith, it is depressing on a man when he calls for his pay and finds three cooking stoves, a lawn mower and a refrigerator charged to him. I don't grudge you the stove; I admit that the lawn mower may be useful; but I'm not paying seven dollars per week for the privilege of urinating house."
"If you wanted a jack-knife, or a yard or two of wire, and asked me for them, or when you asked me for you; but when you fence a quarter section of land, and buy a locomotive at my expense, the time has come for us to say good-bye." And he dusted the palatial ranch.

Two Rich Men's Habits.
Somehow, very rich men never seem to have merry hearts. I saw Vanderbilt the other day out at Johnny Barry's; the well-known roadster charged by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cackled at every sad joke he essayed and applauded every horsey dictum that fell from his lips. The dingy room, the vulgar surrounding and the prevailing air of sordidness made the group a very too gloomy get-together. He is sitting gloomily in a corner surrounded by his toadies, who giggled and cack