Before purchasing your Fertilizer for the coming season, it will be to your interest to give us a call. All the above brands are strictly reliable, because we keep in stock all kinds of the best grade material from which we can make you any grade Fertilizer you may need. This house is an old established one, and every thing they sell you are guaranteed. As an evidence of the superiority of our goods, my sales have increased from 25 tons per annum, the first year to one thousand and eighty-five tons, thus being my sales in Charles and B. Streets since the first year. I shall not be satisfied until I sell every responsible farmer in Southern Maryland, as it is not only for my own interest I wish to do so. My greatest desire is to induce the planters of Southern Maryland to use strictly first class goods and can only do so by dealing with a first class house. If you will buy your goods from the G. O. & S. Co. Company you will not regret it. Mr. W. L. Burch, of Bryanswood, or Mr. C. B. Loyd, our Collector and Sales man, will be glad to receive your orders, and I will devote as much time as I can in the two counties in order to induce the farmers of Southern Maryland to buy the best Fertilizers offered to the people of our State in Union. All responsible orders sent direct to the Company will receive prompt attention.

Yours very truly,
JOHN M. LLOYD.

N. B.—What Mr. James F. Mattingly, a large and practical farmer of Chopton District, St. Mary's county, says of our Tobacco compound: "He says that he can grow as large Tobacco from other fertilizers as he can from Ours, but while Ours is just as good as to quantity, it weighs from 4 to 5 more than any other Fertilizer that he has used. I will here add that Mr. Mattingly is not only a very good and responsible farmer but strictly reliable. Mr. Mattingly has used our goods for several years, and he will use no others but the W. F. O. Fertilizer."

THE ROMANCE OF A FRENCH POLICE COURT.

TRANSLATED BY ALEX. E. SWEET.

A handsome, well-dressed lady was strolling past the store on one of the fashionable streets of Paris, inspecting the contents of the show windows, after the manner of the man, particularly those which contained fashionable dresses and hats, referring of course to the show windows, not to the ladies. A little gentleman, also well-dressed, followed her. In fact we might say he pursued her. Every now and then he would stop and glance at the lady with undisguised admiration and an eye glass, and signs as if he had been eating large quantities of nutmeg fruit. As soon as the lady saw him, an expression of disgust and rage passed over her handsome features. She hastily entered one of the stores, closing the door after her with a bang that sounded like an in-precation.

"Don't imagine, dearest, that you can escape me," said the little man, who had followed her into the store.

"What do you wish?" asked the storekeeper of the lady.

"I wish you would protect me from the impertinence of this man, who follows me wherever I go."

"If I annoy you, madame," said the little man, "you have nobody but yourself to blame for it. It is not my fault.

Everything in the world must have a beginning, and so must our personal acquaintance."

"That, sir, is a very stupid joke," said the lady, scornfully.

"I never joke, madame. Please list-

suasively.

"I desire this year's dress scene to come an end," said she.

"So do I. With you I had enough to take my arm, and I will accompany you to your residence, or anywhere you like. I could be happy with you in a desert."

"But, sir, I don't know you."

"That's what distresses me. All that I ask is for you to give me a chance to become acquainted with you.

For your own sake, madame, take my

arm. I'll offer you my hand, too, if I thought you would take it, and my heart, too."

"You are an impudent fool. I shall not take your arm."

patronize his court. Taking his seat at the judicial throne, he asked placidly what was the nature of the case.

The little man and the baroness stood up. They addressed the chair simultaneously, and with considerable show of emotion, particularly the insulted baroness.

Judge—"Don't both of you speak at once. Which of you is the complainant?"

Gentleman—"I am."

Baroness—"I am."

Judge—"That is impossible. Police-man, which of the parties applied to you first?"

Police-man—"The gentleman did, your Honor."

Judge—"Now, sir, you have the floor. Madame, you will allow the gentleman to state his case."

The baroness sits down with a gesture of despair. The little gentleman bows to the court, clears his throat and asks:

"Has your Honor ever been in love?"

Judge—"I might reply to that question that it was none of your business, but I do not blush to acknowledge that on several occasions I have been under the influence of the tender passion."

Complainant—"Then your Honor will comprehend to some extent the sufferings that I have undergone. About two months ago I recovered from a dangerous and what might have been a fatal illness. My physician said I needed a change of air and amusement. I lived at that time in the Boulevard de Tophet, so I moved to the Rue de Paradis. My greatest pleasure was to look out of my window every morning and witness the awakening of Aurora."

Baroness—"Your Honor, he lies!

He did not bother himself in the least about the rising sun. It was the stard that he had escaped into that he is. For the past two months I have not been able to look out of my window, without being subjected to the insolent glances of that wretched little creature of a man, whom your Honor allows to air his insolence in your court."

"O, you wretch!" and the baroness glared at her with such a look of triumph and scorn that the complainant, who sighed, and said:

"I am sorry to hear that you are in love. It is a very stupid joke."

"I never joke, madame. Please list-

suasively.

"I desire this year's dress scene to come an end," said she.

"So do I. With you I had enough to

like. I could be happy with you in a desert."

"But, sir, I don't know you."

"That's what distresses me. All that I ask is for you to give me a chance to become acquainted with you.

For your own sake, madame, take my

arm. I'll offer you my hand, too, if I thought you would take it, and my heart, too."

"You are an impudent fool. I shall not take your arm."

"That's what I expect you to say," replied the little man, with a sigh,

"but, thank Heaven, I can compel you to listen to what I have to say. I shall simply call on the police."

"To return you to the avium for the feeble-minded, from which you are no doubt a fugitive, or perhaps it is the jail from which you have made your escape, for you look as much like a villain as you do like a fool, which is saying a good deal," said the lady, her face wreathed with contempt.

"Why do you propose to ask for the police?" asked the proprietor of the store.

"The lady will tell you why," said
