

In Java

Natives do not glaze coffee with a cheap and impure coating. They have too high a regard for health as well as for the naturally delicious flavor of their popular berry. The very American roasters who glaze their package coffees do not dare to touch or glaze their high priced Mochas and Javas. Why? Lion Coffee is never glazed or adulterated. It is JUST PURE Coffee. The sealed package insures uniform quality and freshness.

Married.

Chas. William Wulling and Miss Maude Buckman, daughter of Senator and Mrs. C. B. Buckman, were married at 11.30 o'clock Wednesday morning in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives, by Rev. Wm. Walton, at the home of the bride's parents in this city. The large parlor was darkened, and lighted by wax candles and electric lights, and the ceremony took place there.

Mrs. McNairy played Mendelssohn's wedding march as the bridal party entered. The bride was gowned in liberty satin, and carried bride's roses. Her maid of honor, Miss Mabel Buchanan of Sauk Centre, was dressed in blue tissue over white silk and carried pink roses. Fred L. Hoffman was best man.

After the ceremony luncheon was served in the dining room of the new apartments to be occupied by the young couple. Mrs. Mecusker, a sister of the bride; and Mrs. Weber, a sister of the groom, had charge of the table. Misses Carrie Wulling and Margaret Duncan served punch.

The Gish Shortage.

Court Stenographer Woodworth, as special referee, took testimony in the case of school district No 30 vs. W. H. Gish, H. A. Rider, L. Gaudet, J. W. Gish, and J. Brown. Wednesday. W. H. Gish was treasurer of the district, and the others are his bondsmen. The district alleges that the treasurer, who resigned Feb. 23, 1901, owes the district $818.53, and interest. The bondsmen—Rider and Gaudet—claim that the treasurer paid all claims against him as treasurer, and that they paid out over $400 to meet the alleged shortage. They further claim that the principal on the bond—W. H. Gish—was in default when the bond was made, and that the district did not inform the bondsmen of the shortage through knowing of it.

FITZSIMMONS ON HOW TO TRAIN PROPERLY.

Do Not Go to Your Limit of Endurance Before a Fight—Cornishman's Methods.

Bob Fitzsimmons, inventor of the solar plexus blow, which won for him the world's heavyweight championship, is just as original in his methods of training for a battle as he is in the ring. He is forever trying some new punch, but the most interesting feature of his training is the schedule that has made him the physical marvel that he is today.

Fitzsimmons has got the art of training down to a science, and that is the secret of the reserve physical force he has maintained in his advanced years. His idea is to get as much work out of the body and muscles as possible without losing his vitality, and this system Fitzsimmons has discovered after his long years of experience.

His own condition today is evidence of the good results. Although forty years old, he is still as active as men ten years his junior, and he possesses strength and endurance that are really astonishing to the layman. Only those who see the "old man" at work can imagine his great recuperative power and other physical qualities.

As a runner there are few professionals who can outlast him on a long journey. The other day at Bath Beach, N. Y., a couple of well developed youngsters waited for Fitzsimmons to start on his daily road run. They were calculating how far ahead of the former champion they would finish and thought it a joke for Fitzsimmons to try and beat them out, but the "Foxy Grandpa" of the prize ring turned the tables on the youngsters by forcing them to quit before the finish.

Still, with all his work he never shows signs of fatigue. He knows his limit and goes no further. His advice is: "Don't fight your battles in training. Save something for the ring." "First find out what you can stand," says Fitzsimmons, "and then you will be able to do your best in a contest."

While strolling around his gymnasium the other day after a lively bout Fitzsimmons was asked how it was that he never tired. "Well," said the former champion, "I first study what I have got before me and then I start out to do it."

"I make my system as interesting as possible, for one must like the work more or less to really derive from it any great benefit."

"My morning work generally consists of road runs and my physical culture exercises. The distance which I go on the road depends upon how long I have been in training. I start out by going a couple of miles and gradually increase the distance every second day until I can go eight or ten miles without any exertion."

"The physical culture exercises can be taken from the start. This is the best system I know of to develop the body and assist the mind. That work generally takes up the entire forenoon, and if done properly one has a pretty good appetite, but a short rest should be taken before eating."

"My afternoon exercises vary, but I never miss a fast bout with the bag, as it helps to limber my muscles up for the effort that is to be made later. Bag punching is a fine exercise, and when I am through with the leather I feel tip top."

"I am then ready to box, and the length of the bout depends very much on how I feel. I generally go six rounds."

"I follow this with a wrestling bout and change my partners after ten minutes so as I will get plenty of work. By the time I am through my wrestling I am perspiring rather freely, and the utmost care must be exercised not to get cold. Before I give myself a chance to cool off I jump under the cold shower. After that I am dried off and take to the rubbing table, where my trainers go over me carefully, treating every muscle with a liniment preparation made by myself. This rubbing process takes all the tired feeling out of the bones, and I take pleasure in a walk home to prepare for dinner."
