HOPE FOR NEW LAW

Organized Labor Interested in "Employers' Liability Act"

Among the measures before the legislature in which organized labor is interested, none is being watched more closely than the "employers' liability act," which is the product of their joint work, says the Minneapolis Journal. This measure has received the indorsement of nearly every union in the twin cities, and of many others in the state at large. If this proposed law fails of passage, it will not be because those interested have been neglectful. A prominent lawyer was consulted and assisted in the work of framing the bill and every known precaution has been taken to have a law, should it be acted on favorably, which will stand the test in the courts.
