Her Secluded Life

On the front wall of the Crisscross apartment building the tiny balconies are stuck like burs, one to each flat.

'The only objection to living in an apartment house is that there are certain to be some disagreeable people there and of course you can't always avoid them.'

'As for myself, I simply detest anything like gossip and talebearing. Of course, I believe in taking a human interest in one's fellow creatures and lending a helping hand and all that, but I go no farther.'

'That woman below us said, when I told her about it, that the music didn't bother her at all and that Johnnie was a dear little fellow. But, do you know, I can't help being suspicious of a woman who so openly tries to please you and get friendly with you. There is such a thing as going too far. And this Mrs. Johnson is always so dreadfully smiling and sweet. Yet in all the months I've been here I've never seen her husband. It looks odd to me. She wears the loveliest clothes.'

'I wouldn't say anything against her for the world, but when a person is secretive about herself you can't help wondering. And she never even objected when I watered the back window-box and it dripped water all over her hammock and pillows below. It looks to me as though she was afraid to call attention to herself.'

'Oh, look, quick! There goes that girl I was mentioning. You'd know to look at her that she doesn't do a thing but primp and dress. I call it scandalous to waste all one's time trying to look pretty. I'm sure I never was guilty of it and I think I've got along as well as the next one. Did you ever see such wadded hair in your life?'

'She lives upstairs with her married brother and walks through the halls as though she owned the building. I spoke to her pleasantly one morning and thought I'd let her see that I took a friendly interest in her. Besides, I wanted to know the name of the dark young man who takes her out so often, but that saucy creature just looked me over in the coolest way and barely nodded. You'd have thought she didn't care to know me.'

'I'm sure in my day any girl who had such a number of admirers as she has would have been thought unladylike at the least. These giddy girls will always bear watching and you can better believe that I'm keeping my eye on her. I think it no more than my duty, for her brother and his wife don't seem to mind her goings-on in the least.'

'Here comes Mrs. Grant and her baby. If she ever raises that child it will be a wonder, for she has the most ridiculous notions. I've told her time and time again that the only food to bring up a baby on was Riskem's and she goes right on feeding that suffering child Wisem's because she says he likes it and is getting fat on it. As though a five-months-old baby knew what was best for it! And, as I told her, fat is almost always unhealthy. But she didn't seem worried. I don't believe she really cares much for the child, for she is one of these independent, assertive creatures.'

'She never gets nervous for fear the baby may die sometimes as I used to do when I had my first baby. And I'm sure no one could be a better mother than I've been. She just gets out a thermometer and takes its temperature and then says nothing is the matter with it and lets it cry. I call such conduct scandalous! No, the baby looks red and healthy, but you can't tell.'

'There goes that man on the fourth floor to work. He never leaves the house till noon and I don't see what business he can be in that is respectable like that. I'm sure of it, because his wife has so many diamonds. I think it vulgar to wear so many rings.'

'Must you go? I'm sorry, for in half an hour it's more than likely that handsome man will be here. He comes nearly every day at this hour and I can't find out who it is he calls on. I'm sure he doesn't live here and it looks—'

'Ye-e-es, I never thought of that. He may be a doctor, but I doubt it. Do come again. I am so shut up by myself here that I get lonely for something to occupy my mind.'—Chicago Daily News.
