You can make your feed-box pay for a motor car—here's how one salesman did it

He figured out that he could double his earning capacity with a Brush and asked his employer to get one for him, but his employer, who owned a big car, laughed at him—told him it would cost too much.

So the salesman offered to buy and maintain a Brush at his own expense, if his employer would continue the usual livery allowance. His employer agreed.

In eighteen months he saved the cost of his Brush car out of his livery allowance—and greatly increased his value to his firm. Now his employer equips all his salesmen with Brush cars.
