Thelander, Mrs. Victor Erickson and son Henry, Emil Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. August Gustafson and daughter, Miss Selma, were Little Falls callers last Saturday. Mrs. Ole H. Lund was pleasantly surprised at her home last Wednesday afternoon by many of our East Darling women, the occasion being her birthday. Refreshments were served and a nice berry spoon was presented to Mrs. Lind as a remembrance of the day. A nice time was passed in chatting, after which all departed for their homes. J. B. Eystad came up from Alberta last Saturday. He has rented a hay meadow in section 28 and will be busy putting up hay until threshing time. Miss Selma Gustafson underwent an operation for appendicitis Monday morning at the Little Falls hospital. Mrs. John Thelander and Mrs. E. F. Olson and daughter were pleasant callers at the home of Mrs. John Johnson of East Darling last Friday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Thelander moved to their farm Monday of this week. Mrs. Tom McCarty called on friends at Randall Wednesday.

EAST DARLING

July 27.—Services will be held at the Swedish Lutheran church next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. All are welcome to attend. The trains are late almost every day, which shows plainly that another train is needed. If rain does not come soon everything will dry up on the sandy land. Arthur Lindahl is helping Herman Mattison with the haying. We hope that all treat their horses as Frank Rendahl does. He considers eight hours of work a day enough for the horses. July 30.—At the annual school meeting in district 74 John Fredrickson was elected treasurer and John Schelin director for a term of three years. Fritz Liljeblad is learning to operate at the Darling station. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Anderson left Wednesday for their home in Minneapolis, after a visit with relatives. The Misses Mabel Grandstrom and Esther Nelson are guests at the home of Ole Johnson.

Mrs. Samuel Tedford was a business caller at Randall Tuesday. J. C. Waller has started his new home. Dan Miller came home Tuesday from J. C. Waller's, to make his hay, where he has been employed for some time. John Huseman was a caller at the home of J. C. Waller Tuesday. Samuel Tedford is going to have a new cement silo. Miss Lucy Mae Roff went to Little Falls Monday. She was accompanied by Miss Gertrude Tucker of Ft. Ripley.

CULDEUM

July 29.—Mrs. Joe Ehrler and children, who live on a homestead in the northern part of the state, are here for a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Z. A. James. Mrs. Ed Powers is on the sick list this week. Mrs. James Shipman, who has been sick the last two weeks, is able to be out again. The little son of Mrs. Arthur Olson was operated on Saturday night for appendicitis at Swanville. We understand the case was quite serious and the little fellow is getting along as well as can be expected. Rollie Buelow is laid up with a sore foot and has not been able to walk for over a week. We understand it is somewhat improved at the present writing.

NO CHOLERA CURE

Anti-Hog-Cholera Serum Is Recommended As A Preventive, Not a Cure. There is no known cure or preventive treatment by ordinary medicines that can be recommended for hog cholera. Disinfectants properly used in sufficient strength may have some value in preventing hog cholera simply by destroying virus on feeding floors, troughs, etc. The only treatment recommended by the Minnesota College of Agriculture for cholera is the use of the Dorset-Niles hog cholera serum. This serum is the watery portion of the blood of a specially treated, immune hog. It undoubtedly has curative value in some cases but should be recommended as a preventive treatment and not as a cure. Good serum properly used is very reliable and has saved hogs worth millions of dollars, but large quantities of impotent or contaminated serum and imitations of serum were used in this State during the past year with bad results.—M. H. Roberts, Veterinarian, University Farm, St. Paul.

STORING CLOVER HAY

When clover hay is put into the stack, it is advisable to open up the cocks and permit them to air a short time before taking them to the stack or mow. If the hay is put into a stack, the stack should be started upon a bottom of poles, brush, straw, or old hay. Where it is placed directly on the ground there is bound to be more or less spoiled hay in the bottom. Clover hay does not shed water, and it is advisable to top out clover stacks with rather green timothy, prairie, or slough hay, putting on enough hangers to hold the top in place. There are a few variations in the methods of making good clover hay, but the real secret, no matter what the method, is to cut it at the proper time and cure it "in the shade" as much as possible, being careful to avoid a hasty drying up of the leaves and overcuring. Properly cured clover hay will sweat in either the stack or the mow, but unless it is unevenly packed and loose, no alarm need be felt if it gets warm. We clip these suggestions from Extension Bulletin 47, Clover, by Andrew Boss and A. C. Army, which may be obtained, without charge, by addressing the Agricultural Extension Division, University Farm, St. Paul.

A Case of Repentance By MARGARET C. DEVEREAUX

We have usually presumed that repentance must come before death. Eleanor Blake lost her father when she was a little girl, and her mother took for a second husband one William Markland, a widower with a son, at the time of the marriage twelve years older than his stepfather. The widow was very poor, and Mr. Markland was rich. His son, Joseph, was a singular youth, sometimes under the influence of pure and noble emotions and sometimes apparently swayed by the devil himself. When he was in the former condition he was very kind to Eleanor, but when in the latter he seemed to hate her. Eleanor was a favorite with her stepfather and he hoped when she grew to be a woman she would marry his son, for he was aware of the latter's Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde disposition, and he believed that she would be able to tide him over his evil periods, but he only wished for this; he did not attempt to bring it about. Eleanor's mother died when she was fifteen years old, and after being made again a widower Mr. Markland's affection for his little stepdaughter was much enhanced. His son's periods of wickedness seemed to be increasing on him and were a source of distress to his father. Then Joe Markland, when Eleanor was seventeen years old, delighted his father by showing evidence that he was falling in love with his stepfather. Eleanor, however, seemed to regard him only as a brother, but as such was extremely fond of him. He asked for a different love, and when she told him that it was not possible for her to give it to him he fell into one of his wicked states and treated her shamefully. Joe Markland disappeared one day and was not seen at home again for a long while. Meanwhile his father failed in health, and Eleanor was his sole comfort. She considered it her duty as well as her preference to remain single and to minister to him, though she had many suitors. All this time no one knew where Joe Markland was till a few months before his father died, when Eleanor received a letter from him evidently written in one of his angelic moods. He regretted that she could not love him, but did not blame her. He wrote to ask her forgiveness for the way he had treated her. Eleanor wrote that his father could not live long and begged him to come home and give the invalid what comfort he could during the short time that remained before death. Joe wrote that he would come at once; but, though only a few weeks were needed for the journey, he did not arrive for several months. He reached home the day his father died, and it was perhaps as well that he did not arrive sooner, for though he showed no outward signs of his mood to those who did not know him well, he was, nevertheless, in one of his devilish conditions. His father was barely able to bid him goodby and whispered to him that he hoped he would some day secure Eleanor for his wife. Joe took charge of the household and household affairs till after the funeral, when a search was made for the will. No will was found. Joe, being sole heir at law, took possession of the property and told Eleanor that if she would marry him he would turn over the management of it to her. Eleanor refused. Quite properly, knowing as she did that her stepfather desired the watch, she might have yielded, but she saw that Joe was at the time not his better self. Joe Markland remained at home long enough to put his estate under a competent manager, whom he directed to pay his sister $50 a month and permitted her to remain in the home-stead. One morning looking out of an upper window she saw her stepbrother coming. Though some distance from her, he appeared bedraggled. He was walking rapidly, and she had scarcely seen him when she heard him at the door. She ran down to meet him, but he was not where she had expected to find him. Thinking he had entered before her, she went into the living room. There stood Joe with a heavenly look on his face, such as she had often seen there when he had become repentant. She was about to spring toward him when she noticed that he was dripping with water. And singularly enough there was a salt odor about him. She ran out of the room to get something in which to wrap him till he could change his clothing, and when she returned with a blanket she had snatched from a bed Joe was not there. What had become of him? She was about to run into the hall to look for him when she noticed on a table a folded document. She took it up and found it soaked with water. Clinging to it was a fine strand of seaweed. The paper was found to be a will of William Markland, leaving all his property to his stepdaughter, Eleanor Blake. Eleanor was found lying on the floor in a swoon, and an illness followed. When she recovered she said that she had found the will in the attic under a leak in the roof. Soon after this news came of the death of Joe Markland. He had been drowned trying to swim across an inlet on the coast of Tasmania. Had he stolen the will while his father was lying dead, possibly in the same room with him?

HOG CHOLERA IN CANADA

In the campaign for the control and ultimate eradication of hog cholera, Minnesota is fortunate in at least one respect, namely, that on one side the State is bounded by territory that is relatively free from hog disease. Canada does not tolerate hog cholera at all. True it is that the disease frequently makes its appearance within her borders, but it is not allowed to spread, on account of the rather energetic way they have of dealing with it. Canada employs what is commonly known as the 'slaughter method' when an outbreak of the disease occurs. Upon a diagnosis of cholera being made, all hogs in the herd are appraised and slaughtered. The owner is compensated in full for all carcasses that fail to show any evidences of the disease, and receives two thirds value for the affected carcasses. All exposed herds are dealt with in the same way, the work being in charge of veterinary inspectors under the Veterinary Director General of the Canadian Department of Agriculture. A very interesting fact in connection with hog cholera in Canada is that it has been found, with a few exceptions, that the probable source of infection has been uncooked bits of pork rind, etc., which have been eaten by hogs fed on garbage. A large quantity of pork consumed by Canadians is imported from the United States where the disease has been prevalent for a long time. It is possible for a hog to be in the incubative stage of the disease when slaughtered, and the carcass passed for human consumption. This pork apparently has no bad effect on human beings, but will convey the disease to susceptible hogs unless it is thoroughly cooked. Pickling and smoking apparently fail to destroy the cholera germs. Vaccination of hogs is not permitted in Canada. A regulation of the Canadian Government reads as follows: 'The use of hog cholera serum or virus being considered a source of danger, the importation, manufacture, sale or use of such serum or virus is prohibited.' The regulations for the admission of hogs into Canada from the United States are very strict. Hogs that have been vaccinated by the double method cannot be admitted. Hogs coming from localities where there has been cholera within the past six months are refused entrance. Hogs which are not excluded for these reasons are held in quarantine for one month at the Canadian border before being allowed to go to their destination.—H. Preston Hopkins, Assistant Veterinarian, University Farm, St. Paul.

GIRLS' HOME-MAKING COURSE

One of the purposes of the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, is to make the vocation of home-making an art—providing information and instruction along lines that shall make the girl from the farm a more efficient woman. Interest in the work of the home is aroused by giving familiarity with its common processes and their underlying principles and to show the relation of the home of the community. The study of food, shelter, and clothing affords an opportunity to present some of the economic and esthetic as well as scientific problems involved in the management of the household and to give through these a standard of living and of the common materials used in the home. The aim is to introduce the student to some of the housekeeper's problems and above all to awaken her interest in the wider question of sound bodies, wholesome dwelling, and real homes. The Domestic Science Department occupies the second floor of the Home Economics Building. The kitchen is equipped with gas stoves and individual utensils. The sewing-room is supplied with sewing machines of different types, tables for drafting and cutting, and various appliances for the study of clothing. The dining-room is neatly furnished with table, buffet, china closet, dishes, and linen for teaching the proper serving of meals. The course of three years includes instruction in cooking, sewing, home nursing, sanitation, personal hygiene, home decoration, care of the home, marketing, and the keeping of household accounts. The general purpose is to teach each girl to appreciate her home and work to make it a more beautiful place to live in. For the green cabbage worm use drv Paris green dusted on the cabbage when wet, or a spray made by mixing three pounds of paris green with fifty gallons of water and adding two or three pounds of soap. For cauliflower white hellebore should be used instead of paris green.—Division of Entomology, University Farm, St. Paul. Visit the Victor Theatre. Two shows every night. Under new management. Adv.
