VETERINARY NOTES

Be cautious in feeding very hot or tired horses.

Don't feed too much hay to your horses. Such feeding is an injury to the horse.

Moldy feed of any kind may be dangerous, especially moldy cornstalks or any corn products.

The idle horse requires skill and judgment in feeding, just as much as the hard-working horse.

Cattle and sheep are likely to bloat on clover pasture if the clover is damp from the dew or a warm rain.

For bloat, tap a sheep or cow in the left flank, well forward. Keep a trocar handy and know how to use it.

A barrel of water in the hay or grain field, and a pail to each horse at about 10 o'clock on a hot day and again at about 3 o'clock is not only kindness but a measure of safety for the horse.

—Dr. M. H. Reynolds, Chief, Veterinary Division, University Farm, St. Paul.

Wheels Under The Load

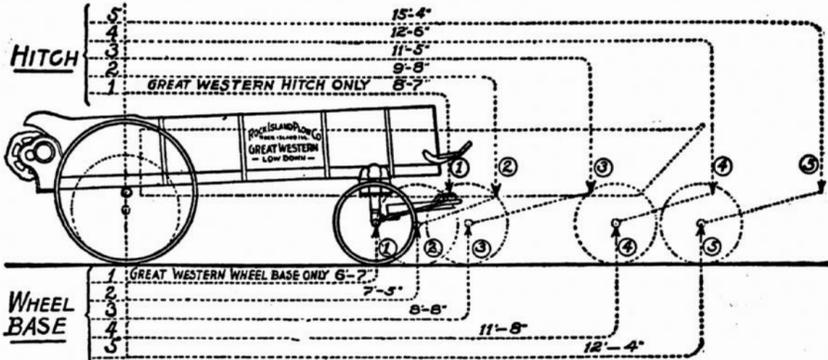

Here is a Spreader that is not an experiment. More GREAT WESTERN machines are in use than any other three makes combined. It's the one that time has proved right, now built lower down, low enough for easy loading. Just the right height to give the clearance a spreader must have. To get every favorable feature you must buy the

Great Western Spreader

The wheels are under the load. The front is positively the strongest made, and won't pull out. Every working part is a known success. Material the best to be had. It's the one perfect Spreader.

This Picture Tells The Truth

Look at it carefully and you can easily see why the GREAT WESTERN is the only Spreader that will give you every advantage.

No. 1 shows the GREAT WESTERN, the one and only perfect Spreader. Look at the wheel base and the close hitch. That's the reason why they draw lighter, handle easier, do better work, will last longer and are really cheaper in the long run.

Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 show the long wheel base, the strung-out hitch, the inferior construction of other spreaders which have proven unsatisfactory and expensive on account of heavy draft, hidden gears, light frames and other weak parts. The GREAT WESTERN has always proved best, and the new, low-down style is still better.
