COUNCIL HAS LONG HOURS

(Continued from page 1) half of the cost of a pavilion, but the council members were not inclined to act on this appropriation at this time as they felt that they wanted to know how the finances of the city were situated first. LaFond was the only alderman who opposed the council's going on record as favoring the pavilion. The committee will likely appear before the council again tonight to ask for the appropriation.

John Vertin called the council's attention to the fact that refuse, which should have been deposited on the city dumping grounds, has been dumped on private property belonging to a woman living in Missouri, and that the land has been practically ruined by it. He said that she was offering the land for sale at a very low price but that she could not dispose of it for this reason. He suggested that if the city was in need of additional dumping grounds the land, consisting of 9 acres, could be purchased from this woman at $30 per acre. In any event, he said, the matter should be investigated by the council to see what can be done. The matter was referred to the public health and safety committee for investigation and the committee was asked to report at the next meeting.

The matter of street sprinkling was taken up but was left until the next meeting and the city clerk was instructed to publish notice to owners of abutting property to be present at the next meeting and express their choice as between water and oil for sprinkling the streets. Street Commissioner LaFond stated that he had figured out that the cost of sprinkling the present district would be $268.12 for one application and $810.51 for three applications. This is a trifle more than the cost of sprinkling with water.

The park committee was authorized to have a pump put in at the park, also to fix up the driveways in the park and the corral and to get a pair of deer, the total expenditures for all of this not to exceed $100. Mr. Peterson said that two deer could be secured for about $35.

BANKERS HELD GOOD MEETING

(Continued from Page 1) right in our midst are young fellows, born and raised here, who are satisfied with the climate, young men with character and ability, who could be established on farms and who would thrive here. Many of these young men have no money and no horses. These young men, however, cannot go to the teachers or to the storekeepers for help, as these cannot capitalize them, and it is up to the bankers who can, to do so. There should be great pleasure for a banker to know that he has established some young man on the farm and made him a permanent and valuable resident of the community.

Mr. Hay suggested that the bankers employ a field man, whose duty would be to go out and visit the farmers in his community and make them feel that the banker has the interest of the farmer at heart, try to find out their needs and arrange to assist them.

The speaker also pointed out the need of giving more attention to immigrants. He said that in most cases the men with families usually leave their families behind until they have their new home in readiness for them. The people in the neighborhood of which these immigrants are moving to should take it upon themselves to meet such newcomers at the station and to help them get comfortably settled. This would be a good thing for the women's clubs to take up, Mr. Hay said. He also suggested community clubs, the membership of which should be composed of both city and country people, to help foster a spirit of friendship and co-operation.

Other things suggested by Mr. Hay were soil surveys, summer community picnics, stock picnics and farm club picnics, in which the bankers should take an interest.

Mr. Hay stated that the multiplicity of banks, especially in the small rural communities in this territory, is causing suspicion among the farmers, who think that the banks are enormous money producers. The only way to allay this suspicion, he said, is to go right to the farmers and get thoroughly acquainted with them.

In closing Mr. Hay said that he believed the banker could afford to lose a little interest in the bank and his money if he would take a part of his time and spend it outside. He said he believed it would pay the banker to take his car and go out to the farmer, not to talk business, but to talk about things that interest the farmer as concerning his farm, and in this way convince him that he has an interest in him. He should also treat the farmer as a social equal, as there is nothing which tends more to bring the two together.

Mr. Von Der Wyer, president of the State Bankers' association, was called upon and he gave a short talk. He extended an invitation to all the bankers to attend the convention in St. Paul on June 20 and 21.

Mr. Richards, secretary of the state association, was called upon next. He spoke largely about banking legislation and expressed the hope that the federal reserve bank laws would be amended so as to permit the small state banks to join. If this was done, he said, we would have the finest kind of a financial system in the world.

William E. Lee, banker of Long Prairie, was the last speaker. He mentioned the fact that he was a resident of this city in the pioneer days and he compared the village of that day with the Little Falls of today, remarking that a wonderful development had been going on here. He said a more substantial city cannot be found in this state.

Mr. Lee spoke in favor of the conservation of food, especially grain, and he advocated prohibition to help this cause, telling of the immense amount of grain used in the manufacture of liquor which he considered wasting it. Some, he said, perhaps might feel that it was not proper to bring this matter before this meeting, but the bankers as a body ought to be in favor of this manner of conserving the food supply as it is highly important.

Mr. Lee suggested that bankers in this district help solve the farm labor problem this fall by going home and urging the business men to spare as many of their employes as possible to help out with the harvest for two weeks.

Before the meeting closed the bankers passed resolutions extending a vote of thanks to the bankers and citizens of Little Falls, expressing their appreciation for the courtesy, hospitality and kindness shown the visiting bankers during their stay here, to the B. P. O. E. lodge No. 770 for the use of their hall for the meetings and to the officers and speakers.
