The Master Touch

By AGNES G. BROGAN

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

Delia rolled up the fluffy bundle of lawn she was sprinkling for ironing and went to the stairway to listen. A glorified light shone in her upraised face as the plaintive notes of a violin came floating down from above.

Sylvia was practicing her overture, and this was the selection chosen by the great teacher for her little sister's presentation to the musical world.

The elder sister caught her breath in anticipated triumph as Sylvia's music came to her. Was it not this hour for which she had labored unceasingly, sacrificing her own youthful pleasure in the effort. When Delia's father had lived, it had been their dream—the father's and her's—that she might grow up to be the musical genius which care and responsibilities had moved beyond his own reach.

As Sylvia sat wide-eyed while Delia played on her father's violin, a sudden purpose came into the young girl's heart. This little one should now be the genius of the family. In Sylvia should be the fulfillment of her own and her father's dream. Love of music was evidenced surely in Sylvia's tireless pleasure in her playings; Sylvia should have those advantages of training which she and her father had missed.

And when the last home teacher had assured her that Sylvia could learn no more from her, Delia had taken her to the city where "the master" lived. She would not confess even to herself that his lack of enthusiasm in Sylvia's promise had almost brought discouragement. These successful men were difficult to convince of ability in others, and after all, even he had agreed that Sylvia's reading was perfect.

"All as it is written," the great man had said after the girl's performance; then he had frowned.

When the sisters went back to the little home Sylvia danced carefree out to the hammock in the garden. "I shall end by falling in love with the fascinating master," she warned, but the elder sister smiled her indulgent smile.

Almost guiltily she drew her father's violin from its shabby case. Few lessons of Sylvia's had escaped her eager attention, as apparently absorbed in work she moved about the room or sat quietly sewing by lamp or window.

And now Delia was anxious to try the strain which had been Sylvia's afternoon theme.

There was much that the elder sister passed by perplexedly, but the dominating melody came breathing subdued, beneath her bow. Sylvia in the garden must not hear, must not know of her elder sister's clumsy following. Sylvia must know no other touch save that of the best. And as Delia played happy tears glistened upon her lashes.

She was seeing in fancy a victorious vision of her youthful sister, the center of attraction amid a throng of upraised faces. There would be admiration in these faces at Sylvia's surprising beauty; and then when she began to play, moving her soft, white arms, the admiration would deepen into emotion. Oh! that one hour would more than repay the years of deprivation. And the teacher, he would be there, his keen eyes resting upon her.

Delia sighed as she laid aside the violin. "All that was really worth while would come to the little sister." When at last she awaited in the big hall the coming of Sylvia's number on the program she sat unheeding other pupils' best efforts. Delia's face was very hot, her hands so cold.

Upon her came a realization of some impending crisis, and she could not shake off the feeling. Then toward her, down the aisle came the great teacher.

"If you please," he said, "will you come to Miss Sylvia in her dressing room. She is obsessed with stage fright and cannot be persuaded to play her part. That is the principal number on the program. You may be able to give her courage."

Silently Delia rose and followed him. Together they stood by her little sister's side. Upon the floor before them lay a discarded violin. The girl was crying tumultuously.

"I can't do it," she sobbed. "I hate music, I hate the violin. It was only to please you, Delia, always. I could not disappoint you. But now—" Sylvia arose determinedly—"I'm going away," she said.

Speechlessly the elder sister looked from the girl's retreating figure back to the face of the teacher.

"Oh!" she whispered, "our dream!" Then, very sadly, she picked up the discarded violin, her fingers sought the bow.

Then she remembered again the teacher was standing near, gazing spellbound into her face.

"You!" he burst out, sharply, "go to them, those waiting people, and play what your sister should have played."

"You mean?" breathed Delia. The teacher put his hand upon the roughened one holding the violin bow. "I mean," he answered gently, "that yours is the genius; yours, the master's touch."

So, in her plain white muslin frock, the elder sister stood and played to the waiting throng. But she saw not the admiration of those upraised faces, or the emotion which grew and deepened, for the joyous soul of Delia was up among the stars.

RED CROSS NOTES

Louise, Mary and Louis Brown, Helen Joswiak, Robert Nelson, Peter Kiewel and Leonard Millhardt gave a play and had a stand which brought in $1.60 to the Red Cross.

Celia, Albana and Lillian Trafas and Catherine Cierlik gave a play. The proceeds were $2.55 which they gave to the Red Cross.

The following statement has just been issued by the director of the Red Cross Institute for crippled and disabled men:

"We must count on the return from the front of thousands of crippled soldiers. We must plan to give them the best possible chance for the future. The government will provide the best of surgical care and special training for self-support but the public must also help to get the soldier back on his feet. The public must be convinced that the cripple is not helpless but capable of being restored to complete independence if trained and placed in the right kind of work. The greatest terror in the war has been the prospect of returning home disabled. It is no more than fair that mothers should know how little the loss of a limb means now to a man who is himself determined to succeed."

The American Red Cross, through its representative at Berne, Switzerland is forwarding supplies to all American prisoners of war confined in German prison camps. As soon as a man is reported officially as a prisoner of war, a 20-pound parcel of nourishing food is sent him each week as well as proper clothing and tobacco. At the present time there is sufficient food at the warehouse in Berne or in transit to supply 10,000 prisoners for a period of six months.

Word has been received by his mother in this city that William Taylor has arrived safely overseas.

D. J. Bell, who has been confined to his home because of an injured side, resumed work at the Sylvester-Nichols factory Saturday.

Mrs. W. P. Michie entertained Friday afternoon in honor of Mrs. A. M. O'Brien of Calgary, Alberta, Canada, who is visiting at the Michie home. About 25 ladies were present.

Mrs. E. W. Kallier of this city has received word that her brother, Hugh Nickerson, has arrived safely overseas.

Miss Olga Woehlert, who is employed as bookkeeper in the L. O. Wessell company's store, enjoyed a short vacation at Birch Lake this week.

The Little Falls Vulcanizing company, so as to better accommodate their increasing business, have installed a new vulcanizing apparatus consisting of four cavities in which tires from size 3 to 5 can be baked. This apparatus bakes tires the whole way around in one operation, taking but fifty minutes, whereas it took three operations by using the old operation.

Leo Billstein, deputy county auditor, and family are at Pillsbury lake, where Mr. Billstein will enjoy a two weeks' vacation.

Word has been received by J. M. Totten of this city, that Lee Hall of Randall has arrived safely overseas.

Recent word from Frank Dewey states that he has arrived safely overseas.

Miss Hazel Depts is confined at St. Gabriel's hospital following a surgical treatment.
