USING ELECTRIC LIGHT WIRE

Experts Tell the Safe Way to Employ This System for Radio Receiving. Since the announcement that the bureau of standards of the department of commerce had perfected a method of employing electric light wires in place of aerials, considerable experimenting has been done by various amateurs, some of whom have had good luck while others succeeded only in blowing a large number of fuses.

Engineers of an eastern electric light company have offered the following suggestions to amateurs: "First—Successful results have been obtained so far only with audion bulb sets. Crystal sets receive the signals, but for some reason they are very weak and indistinct.

"Second—No set should be used on this system without air or oil filled condensers, placed in series with either the antenna circuit or the ground circuit—preferably in the antenna circuit.

"Third—A fuse not heavier than one-half ampere should be used in series and just ahead of the antenna connection.

"Fourth—An ordinary separate detachment plug—i. e., one with two blades connecting the two separate halves of the plug—is used. Only one wire is run from this plug. The other binding screw left undisturbed. This single conductor wire should be long enough to reach from a handy electric light socket to the table where the instrument is located and should terminate in the fuse mentioned above.

In case an externally connected condenser is used, the circuit should be run from the fuse to the condenser and from the condenser to the antenna binding post of the receiving set.

"In sets where the condenser is built into the instrument the connection from the fuse is run directly to the antenna binding post. All other connections should be exactly the same as for conventional overhead aerial receiving.

SHORT FLASHES

The first national radio compass station on the Great Lakes was recently installed. Other stations will shortly be in service when the "graybeard" of the lakes will have lost its terrors.

It is claimed that John Hayes Hammond, Jr., and Dr. E. L. Chaffee have invented an appliance that insures secrecy in wireless. The system is based on principle of producing characteristic waves to which only especially equipped receivers are responsive.

Secretary Hoover's force of "secret cops" may take the form of special government detecting stations where aerial post offices could be arranged so as to detect the direction from which interruptions come. By a series of relays, the government station nearest the violating amateur could be notified and the source of trouble stopped.

Now the fans in England are having a hard time with their air. According to a report from England there are only 8,000 authorized amateur operators in the United Kingdom. The London Daily Mail states that the reason for the art's tardy growth is the fact that "hampering and senseless restrictions in this country prevent wireless amateurs from getting practice. The old fogies of the army and navy air forces are afraid of the amateurs and use their influence in having the postoffice authorities impose impossible and vexatious restrictions that limit the field."

Geo. Nelson and M. S. Patnaude were at Ft. Ripley after two new wheel scrapers for Ripley town, and red ones at that; Friday evening.
