ANTENNAE OF OTHER TYPES ARE DESCRIBED

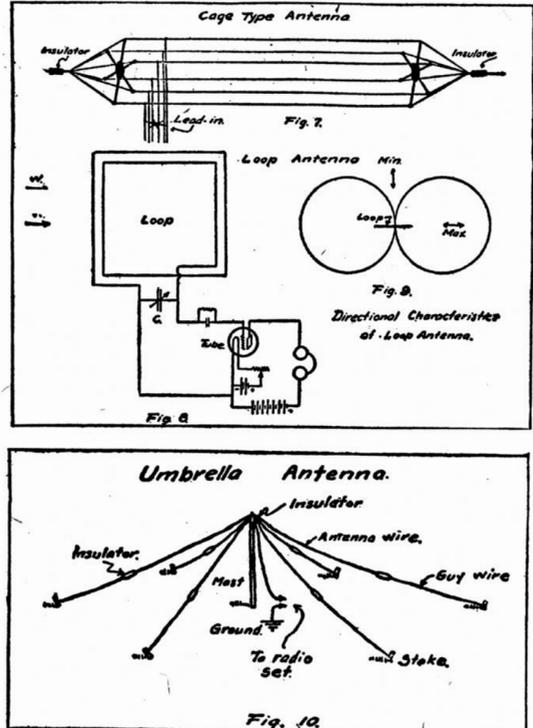

Cage, Loop and Umbrella Forms Have Each Certain Advantages and Special Uses.

Some of the newer generation of radio amateurs may have been led to think that the cage antenna is more efficient than other forms. One of the arguments advanced for their use is that they have been adopted by the United States navy on all ships. There is a good reason for the adoption of this type of antenna for the navy, but it is not because of the great efficiency of the cage type. In fact, the only reason the cage type is used at all in the navy is because of the fact that it would be difficult for an enemy shell to carry away the antenna with a single shot.

There seems to be a good deal of misinformation on the merits of the cage-type antenna. They make a partly by its inherent characteristics. One of the most important applications of the loop antenna is as a radio compass, for ship, airplane and submarine. By means of the Bellini-Toad system, in which two single wire antennae, erected at right angles to each other, are used, the exact bearing of a distant transmitter may be determined. This system is the one used by the numerous naval radio compass stations along the sea coast.

The umbrella-type antenna, as illustrated in Figure 10, receives its name from its general shape and similarity to an umbrella. Referring to the figure it will be seen that this type of antenna consists of a number of wires connected at the upper end of a vertical mast and radiating from this point in several directions. The lead-in is taken from the central point of the antenna system.

pretty appearance, it is true, but unfortunately in radio, pretty is as pretty does, and it takes more than any artistic appearance to do the work.

One of the so-called advantages of the cage is that high tension corona losses are reduced to a minimum. If the amateur is using undamped oscillations, that is, using a vacuum tube transmitter, he need not be concerned about corona losses. However, if a damped or spark transmitter is used, also uniform current distribution is secured by the use of the cage antenna. This is not the case with the flat-top antenna, where the currents are not equal, the outer carrying more current than the inner wires. From the foregoing it may be said that the cage antenna is to be preferred to the flat-top only because of the reduction of the high-voltage corona losses and because of the uniform current distribution.

It has been shown that antennae have certain well defined directional characteristics. The one having the most clearly defined characteristics is the loop antenna shown in Figure 8. In actual practice a very satisfactory type of loop antenna for reception purposes consists of eight turns of No. 16 wire, spaced one-eighth, and wound on a frame 36 inches square. The fundamental wave length of this antenna is approximately 180 meters. Obviously loop antennae need not be square. They may be triangular, circular, or any closed shape, and their linear dimensions are not necessarily fixed. Due to their small dimensions, the amount of energy picked up by them is also small, and therefore they should be used only with several stages of radio frequency amplification before the detector. See Figure 8, in which the loop is shown with only a detector.

In the hook-up, L is the loop antenna, and forms the inductance in the oscillating circuit. O is the variable condenser connected across the loop terminals and is used to tune the loop to the proper wave length.

A loop antenna in this manner has extremely sharp directional characteristics and receives signals only from stations in the plane of the loop. That is, the loop must be parallel to the direction of travel of the wave sent out by the transmitter.

Many good circuits have recently been devised whereby loop antennae are used with success in eliminating static interference. This elimination is accomplished partly by the small linear dimensions of the loop and can be fastened either to a small post or to a peg driven into the ground. Due to the fact that the wires of the umbrella-type antenna cover a large area of ground, the capacity of the antenna is very large. The total inductance, however, is only a little greater than that of the vertical portion of the antenna.

The umbrella-type antenna has not found a very wide field of application in commercial or amateur telegraphy. During the war it was used to some extent in portable army sets. Due to its directional characteristics, which are nil—or in other words, energy is radiated equally in all directions—it has found some favor with some high-powered commercial stations for transoceanic communication.

RADIO FLASHES

The New York-to-Brazil airplane carried a two-stage radio receiving warnings, time signals, news bulletins and entertainment.

All ships sailing from American harbors and carrying 50 persons are required by law to maintain and operate a radio set capable of covering at least 100 miles.

Every one of the 15 air-mail stations in the United States is radio-equipped. It is planned to provide a few of these with radio telephone, as well as radio telegraph, service.

Montclair, N. J., has installed in its high school an aerial equal in size to some of the broadcasting stations. The receiving set is in the physics department and many of the pupils are licensed operators.

It is reported that government experts have noticed that high-frequency waves from radio broadcasting stations nearby have caused vegetation to take on a larger growth and reach maturity sooner than under ordinary conditions.

It is proposed to increase the facilities for broadcasting by varying some of the many 300-meter stations by 25 or 300 meters. It is believed that this arrangement would permit more of the stations to operate at the same time and make it unnecessary to divide the time into so many rather short periods of operation.

CUSHING

Nov. 7.—Services will be held in the Swedish Baptist church Sunday, Nov. 12th, at 10:30 and evening of same date at 8 o'clock. The Ladies' Aid meets Monday, Nov. 13th, at the church at 2 o'clock. Everybody welcome.

There was a good attendance at the basket social and program in District No. 49 Saturday evening.

Frank Foster, carrier on Route 2, and Frank Beto, carrier on Route 1, are taking their annual vacation of two weeks. Herbert Loysen and E-mer Nygaard are substituting. There was no school in the rural schools Tuesday, it being a legal holiday.

The Ladies' Aid of the Lutheran church will meet Saturday, Nov. 11th, with Mrs. Chas. Johnson. Everybody welcome.

Miss Hazel Mattson and Pansy Friend spent the week-end at their homes at Little Falls.

Mr. and Mrs. Shoop, who have been visiting the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Nelson, left Sunday for their home at Duluth. Services will be held in the Lutheran an church Sunday, Nov. 12th, at 3 o'clock.

Frank Foster left the first of the week for Grand Rapids for a short visit with his parents there.

A. Johnson, buttermaker at this place, spent Sunday at his home at Anoka.

Geo. Severson has purchased the butchershop, formerly vacated by Christ Madsen.

The horses out on Hallowe'en night doing the usual pranks.

BUCKMAN

Nov. 6.—Announcement was made in church Sunday of the coming marriage of Louis Poster of Pierz and Miss Margaret Stumpf.

Sunday night the two barns on the farm of Mrs. Arnold Nagel were destroyed by fire. The origin of the fire is unknown. Some of her neighbor's boys returned home from a party and they were the first ones to see the fire. They immediately summoned help and they also aroused Theodore Nagel, who was asleep when the fire occurred.

Nothing was saved that was in the barn. Six cows and two calves and all the hay and harness were burned. Some chickens were taken out of the chicken coop when it was thought the chicken coop would also start to burn. Fortunately the horses and sheep were in the pasture or else they would also have burned.

Joseph Jansen lost a valuable cow last week.

Mr. and Mrs. John Hohn and family of Sauk Rapids, who attended the funeral of his mother last week, returned home last Wednesday.

Hass Henning made a trip to Pierz Sunday.

Don Cameron was a business caller in our burg Sunday.

Grandma Britz is on the sick list. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hortsch of St. Francis and Mrs. Eddie Hortsch of St. Anna were here for a short visit last week.

GILBERT

Nov. 9.—The Misses Esther and Agnes Hedlund and Anna Peterzen and Victor Enlund motored up from Minneapolis Thursday for a short visit here. The young ladies returned to the city Monday.

Clarence Tuttle is doing some breaking for C. H. Johnson this week.

At the close of the double auto contest in the Daily News, Julius Johnson won a gold watch. This was the third premium he had won in this contest.

The Misses Elizabeth Dixon, Vena Pelkie and Anna Peterzen and Isadore and Leo Doucette and Nels Petersen attended the dance in Ft. Ripley Saturday night.

Miss Olga Hedlund has been acting as housekeeper in the Alec Campbell home as Mrs. Campbell is ill.

Esther and Agnes Hedlund were guests of Mrs. Albert Olson last Friday afternoon.

W. H. Tuttle, Elizabeth Dixon and Isidore Doucette motored to Minneapolis Tuesday, called by the serious illness of Miss Addie Dixon. Mr. Tuttle returned the same day.

Carl Johnson and Albert Olson had loads of feed to the feed mill last Thursday.
