DETROIT WILL CELEBRATE.

Detroit is going to celebrate the Fourth of July again this year on Monday, July 5th.

This will make the third successive celebration and while last year's celebration was the biggest ever held in this part of the state the little city among the lakes promises to have one equal to it if not better. There was left over from last year's fund nearly $500 and the business men have contributed enough to make up nearly $2,000 which will be expended for the benefit of our visitors.

The committees that have charge this year have already been appointed and are at work on the may details.

The Fourth coming on Monday this year will make a good opportunity for visitors to spend two or three days at the lakes. Arrangements will be made for accommodations for everybody this year. Base ball games, two days. Balloons; bands, fireworks, etc.

Further announcements will be made in this paper.—Adv.

Memorial Day Exercises.

Formerly quite a large number of veterans used to be in the parade on memorial day, but last Monday they numbered only seven, namely; Albert Fairbanks, Frank Roy, Alex Beaulieu, Mr. LaChappelle, Thos. Swan, Peter Parker and Charles Bottineau.

It is sad to think that within comparatively a short time there will be no more civil war veterans to march in parade on memorial days, but it will be many generations before they will be forgotten.

The exercises of the day commenced at the Catholic cemetery where Father Aloysius gave an address in the forenoon, and in the afternoon the old soldiers marched to the cemetery at the Episcopal church and there Mr. Powers made an address.

National songs were sung at both cemeteries and the school band furnished the music.

HENRY BAUMBACH OF OLD CROW WING.

At old Crow Wing in 1868 there arrived from up the Mississippi River a couple of log rafts, and on one of these a quiet man swung a rudder. He was at first taken for an ordinary lumber jack but the second evening after his arrival when the strains of a piccolo were heard wafting up from the water's edge, it was learned that this man, who was Henry Baumbach, was a fine musician, and it was no common occurrence to see a crowd on the raft being entertained by his fine music.

It was not long after this that a violin box, addressed to Henry Baumbach, arrived at the express office of the old stage company, and it contained a violin, and again "Hank" as he was familiarly called, surprised the old timers by showing that he was an adept upon that instrument. Hank became the leading musician for Crow Wing county and several of the adjoining counties.

In the course of time and after Brainerd was built Crow Wing ceased to be a place of importance and within several years was entirely abandoned, and Hank, like all other residents there, went away. Occasionally during the past forty years some of his old Crow Wing acquaintances have met him, but during the past two or three years the impression prevailed here that he had started on his last trip to the Great Beyond, and many of his old friends upon this reservation sincerely mourned his death not only because of his popularity among them but because he was one of the old Crow Wing boys. Last Monday a delegation went from here to attend the memorial day services at Detroit and also to meet Senator Clapp, who was the principal speaker of the day. When they got on the train at Ogema Ed. Wakefield, who has known Hank Baumbach since his earliest recollections, discovered the latter seated among the passengers, and there was a joyous meeting between him and his old friends and acquaintances.

Mr. Baumbach belongs to a troupe of civil war veterans which gives musical entertainments and vaudeville selections which are pronounced first class by the ball players that went to Thief River Falls last week where they saw the troupe.

Mr. Baumbach promised to visit White Earth in the near future to renew old acquaintance and friendship with former old Crow Wingites.
