Treasurer Gilfillan speaking of the decision of the Secretary involves no new departure in the practice of the Department, but is fully sustained by law and pre-cedent; that the effects of the decision would discourage in the future any concerted action on the part of the banks for the reduction of their circulation and render it impossible for them to first contract and then expand the currency for purposes of speculation; that had it been decided to permit the withdrawal asked for by the banks it would have lodged in the hands of those institutions a dangerous power, liable, under the most favorable circumstances, to be abused and which could be utilized at any ed to this Court;
