WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, May 21, 1886. Many Congressmen are now in a dis turbed state of mind, lest they will not be returned to their seats next fall. They are waiting anxiously for news of their renomination. Quite a number of them, it is thought, are doomed to disappointment, and the thought of their dilapidated fences at home, makes them anxious for an early adjournment.

The passage of three appropriation bills by the House last week made them hopeful of an early release and Speaker Carlisle is quoted as saying that it is possible for Congress to adjourn by the 25th of June. That will be less than six weeks. The prevailing opinion, however, is that Congress will not get away before August. Work is far behind, and while many members would like to be among their constituents, others want time to make Congressional records for the approaching can-

A good joke was perpetrated upon Senator Vance by Senators Kenna and Saulsbury. On entering the Senate chamber Thursday morning these gentlemen saw a beautiful basket of flowers upon the North Carolina Senator's desk, and before the latter came in, removed it to the desk of Senator Beck. When Mr. Vance entered, they called his attention to the Kentucky Senator's "floral tribute." Oh, ves, remarked Mr. Vance, in his disrespectful, jovial way: Beck bought it somewhere. That's the way all these fellows get flowers. Mr. Kenna suggested that Mr. Vance examine the card attached to the basket. When he discovered that the flowers were for himself, Mr. Vance took possession of them with the remark that there were exceptions to all rules.

Representative Kelly, of Pennsylvania, who is called the Father of the House because he is the oldest member in it and has served through more Congresses than any other man, was talking about the general deportment of Congressmen now, and away back at the beginning of the war. He says there is more courtesy among members of the present day, they wear better clothes, and there is less intemperence. When he first came to Congress there was scarcely a committee room which had not a full supply of liquors. There was an abundant supply of whiskey in the office of the clerk of the House, and a regular bar was kept in the basement restaurants, while there was then no such name as "cold tea" used for whiskey straight. There was also more in temperance on the floor of the House, and the drinking about the clerk's office became so common that John W. Forney, when he wanted to be Secretary of the Senate, had to make a pledge to Vice President Williams and Charles Sumner that no liquors would be kept in his office, before they would vote for him.

But as to oratory in Congress, the venerable Pennsylvanian does not speak so hopefully. He thinks it is on the decline The business of Congress has changed of late years, and it is now done more by the consultation of leading members, by committee, and by caucus. Speeches do not have much influence on legislation now, and this influence seems to grow less from year to year.

The Senate has passed a bill to appropriate from the Treasury $500,000 for a monument to Abraham Lincoln. Another has passed for a monument to General Grant to cost $250,000. It has been suggested that this money would be spent in a more appropriate way if put into a memorial bridge across the Potomac, to bear the names of these good and great men. It is held that the carrying out of such a plan would be a climax to our great river improvements, that are, one day, in spite of log rolling River and Harbor Committees, to be the pride of the nation.

If our late ex-Presidents Lincoln and Grant could now be consulted in regard to this matter, there is little doubt as to what their decisions would be. A great, useful structure like a bridge from the Capital of the nation across the Potomac to the soldiers' national cemetery at Arlington Heights would be a grateful perpetration of their memories. It would be far more sensible than an exhibition of bronze or marble, in some uncomfortable attitude, to stand for ages in the wind and rain and heat and cold, and to be criticised perhaps as inartistic.
