The annual meeting of the Lutheran Synod of Minnesota and other states will be held at Jordan, from 22 to the 29 day of June. Rev. C. J. Albrecht and Prof. O. Hoyer, A. F. Rein, G. Burk and C. Rechenbecher of this city will be in attendance.

We call the attention of our readers to the new advertisement of Schubert and Floor. They have opened and are now dealing in first class farm machinery at their place of business corner Broadway and 2nd North Street. Give them a call.

Upon the application of the mayor, Judge Webber has appointed E. G. Koch, Albert Behnke and Jac. Klossner jr. as members of the board of Public Works. We believe that these appointments will give entire satisfaction to the tax payers.

Theresa, daughter of Wolfgang Preisinger, of Lafayette, aged 9 years, died last Saturday, at the Hospital, of the fatal disease diphtheria. Three daughters of Mr. Preisinger who were afflicted with the same disease have recovered.

Corpus Christi was observed by the Catholics of New Ulm and vicinity with the usual ceremonies Thursday. The procession was not as extensive as in former years, there being only one altar erected in place of four as was the custom in former years. The attendance was quite large. Rev. Tori of Sleepy Eye conducted the services as Rev. Berghold has not quite recovered from his late attack of sickness.

The Review man made a flying visit to Courtland last Wednesday and was pleased to find the little place prospering. The three stores of Ch. Bobbin, Richter & Cordes and R. G. Roberts are doing a good business. A. Aman runs a first class blacksmith shop, Fred Bobbin refreshes the thirsty and hungry and a number of other industries are well represented. Mr. James Doty has improved his herd of blooded cattle lately by purchasing ten head of Holsteins from Minneapolis. They are daisies and no mistake.

The national Monument Committee, Sons of Hermann, Messrs. H. Orleman, J. C. Haupt and Wm. Theobald conferred with delegates from the State Lodges, at Minneapolis, last week. The cost of the monument is estimated at $24,000. Of this sum $6,000 are in the hands of the treasurer and it was decided to commence the building of the foundation with this sum. The national committee will address a circular letter to all of the lodges asking them to assist in raising the necessary $19,000. Work on the foundations was commenced last week.

Thomas Healy, a young man 21 years of age, met with a horrible death on his farm 2 1/2 miles west of Fulda, Wednesday June 8. He was engaged in breaking with four horses, they in some manner became frightened and ran away. The unfortunate young man had the lines tied around his waist and could not free himself. The horses ran to the barn, a distance of three quarters of a mile, and dragged the victim with them. Arrived at the barn, the horses stopped and Healy's mother rushed from the houses upon beholding the terrible sight, to free her son. She succeeded in doing so, but soon realized to her horror that the poor boy was dead. As soon as Mrs. Healy freed her son from the entangled lines, the horses started again and ran into a slough about half a mile from the barn. Three of them drowned.

The two concerts given by the New York Philharmonic Club far surpassed all other performances in the fine arts ever brought before an audience in this city. Saturday's concert opened with Haydn's Third Symphony in G Major, whose rendition at once verified all that had been said relative to the high standing of the Club as a chamber music organization. The mastery in which the fugal passages were brought out gave evidence that in its ensembles the Club acts as a unit, the set of instruments blending into one harmonious whole. Mr. Schenck's violoncello solos proved that he is a performer of the highest rank on that difficult instrument. His tones, fundamentals as well as harmonics, were pure and sweet, and his mastery of technical difficulties is truly marvelous. Mme. Tanner's singing of "The Wren" displayed her excellent vocal training as well as a voice of great compass and sweetness. Mr. Arnold's violin solo was above all criticism. He proved a master of that soul-stirring instrument, not only on the finger-board, but also in his handling of the bow. The most difficult pizzicato passages were executed in faultless and elegant style. His encore was equally effective. The set of "In the Sunshine" was of a somewhat light character, but well calculated to show that imitative music may descend even to apparently trivial subjects without sacrificing its dignity as a fine art. The next number was one of the masterworks of musical literature, Schubert's String Quartet in D Minor, composed but a few years before the death of the great Viennese. Its effect was considerably impaired by the entrance of boots continually returning from other sources of inspiration, a circumstance which evidently chilled the performers to their hearts. It should be borne in mind by those whose ideal of an artist does not rise above the hand-organ-grinder, that such disturbances constitute a greater insult to artistic performers and their audience than the inauguration of a prize-fight in the ordinary Uncle-Tom's-Cabin show. Before the quartet was brought to a close, the resolution of a chord of the diminished seventh was anticipated by an extended falsetto duo in the parterre, demonstrating that even in its infant state the human soul is indwelt with musical aspirations. The aria of the queen of the night in Mozart's "Magic Flute" was excellently rendered by Mme. Tanner, who then sang as an encore the beautiful song, "Ich liebe dich, weil ich dich lieben muss." Haendel's celebrated Largo gave Mr. Weiner an opportunity to enchant the audience with that purity and sweetness of tone which even so imperfect an instrument as the flute can be made to yield in the hands of a master, while in the Allegro following he could display his marvelous mastery of technical difficulties. The chords of Schumann's romantic Evening Song, in some passages foreboding, as it were, the gloom that was to fall upon the mind of the unfortunate composer, then filled the hall, followed by the spirited rendering of the famous Turkish March from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens." Schubert's "Taubenpost," the last song composed by the maestro, was then sung by Mme. Tanner in lovely style. It was followed by "If a body meet a body" as an encore. We were a little surprised at this, and should have preferred the artistic rendering of Yankee Doodle to this musical chestnut. The concert closed with Liszt's brilliant Rhapsodie Hongroise No. 3, brought out in that spirited and fantastic style which is indispensable to a reproduction of Liszt's tone-pictures. Want of space forbids a discussion of Sunday's concert, which was of the same high character as that of the evening before, and in which the audience could listen undisturbed to the soul-stirring chords of a string quartet into which the performers seemed to infuse their very souls.

During the first half of Sunday's concert the audience as well as the performers were repeatedly annoyed by noises that proceeded from the gallery and the open windows. A number of small children from six to eight years of age, mostly girls, had gained admission through the windows and constituted one of the sources of disturbance. Subsequent investigation showed that these girls had left home with the permission of their parents. We were handed a list of parents who thus permitted their offspring to stay out until a late hour at night without knowing of their whereabouts, and we forbear publishing the same this time in the belief that this plain hint will suffice. The loud talking heard from the gallery proceeded from Somebody's son, who was discussing with his sweet-heart the relative merits of the double-sac and the Jew's-harp. Between eighty and a hundred persons, mostly adults, male and female, had assembled in the park to listen to the music by way of the open windows. A number of half-grown bullies who would better be brought under the jurisdiction of the schoolmaster's rod for some time yet instead of employing them in our business establishments, were trying all in their power to disturb the performance. Among the names handed us we find employes of stores, mills, barber shops, etc. Quiet was not restored until the whole crowd had been kicked out of the park, whereupon a member of the police force was procured to keep them from re-entering. We hope that the Turnverein will take the proper measures for prosecuting those who may hereafter enter their park at night without permission. The police will cheerfully give all assistance in this direction that may be desired.
