WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 21st, 1888.

Senator Sherman made a very sensible speech in response to a serenade given by the Sheridan Republican League, a newly organized club of colored men. His advice to the negro of the South is to get educated and to acquire property. Better advice could scarcely be given to anybody. Another bit of intelligence was the speech of Mr. Sherman's speech. He said: "If injustice is done, you must not resort to mob violence and crime. You must appeal to the law and public opinion. In any resort to force, the advantage is fearfully against you. Your hope is in the moral conviction, growing stronger day by day, that injustice to you reacts on your oppressors."

Senator Allison may be seen at the Capitol since the recess getting the tariff bill in good shape for its final passage by the Senate.

Some amusement has been created among those who are conversant with the undercurrent of Congressional action at the easy manner in which the Democratic Senators tumble into the open trap which had been set for them by the Republicans. Of late the fact has been patent that unless the consideration of the State tariff bill could in some manner be hurried up its passage would be somewhat doubtful, owing to lack of time. Observing this state of affairs the Republican Senators thought that the Christmas recess might be dispensed with and evening sessions of the Senate held in order to get through the tariff bill sometime in January. This was by no means a pleasant arrangement for those Senators who expected to eat their Christmas turkey at home. How to get the recess and at the same time make sure of the tariff bill was the question. It was easily settled and the trap set by holding a caucus of Republican Senators and deciding against a Christmas recess. In an hour every Democratic Senator had heard of the action of the caucus, and was in a state of indignation thereat. The House had passed without a division a joint resolution for a recess from Friday 21st, inst. to Monday, January 7th, and the Republican Senators had actually decided not to allow the Senate to take any recess at all! Shameful! The Democratic Senators called a caucus to consider the matter, and appointed a committee to wait on the Republicans and attempt to bring about some sort of compromise that would give the recess. This was exactly what the Republicans wanted, and what they had confidently expected. The committee was informed that the only reason the Republicans opposed the recess was because, owing to the needless amendments offered by Democrats, the time seemed to be necessary for the consideration of the tariff bill. The committee was also informed that if the Democrats would agree to take the final vote upon the tariff bill early in January the Republicans would agree to vote for the Holiday recess. The committee, after conferring with the Democratic Senators, and after objecting to every date mentioned, finally agreed to allow the final vote to be taken on the tariff bill January 21st, while the Republicans agreed to vote for a recess from last Friday to Wednesday, January 2nd. Thus every body was made happy and the Republicans went home feeling particularly good. To think their tariff bill would get through all right next month, sometime earlier than the most sanguine had hoped. This early passage of the bill will upset the calculations of the Democratic leaders of the House, who had based their arrangements on the idea that the bill would not get through the Senate until so late in the session, that they could pigeon-hole it on the ground of lack of time for its proper consideration.

Senator Quay stopped here on his return from his visit to General Harrison, but as far as any news of the visit is concerned he might as well have gone directly home. "I am pleased with my visit to Gen. Harrison, and entirely satisfied," is about the substance of all that Mr. Quay has said of his visit.

If every man who elected Gen. Harrison is to have a position in the Cabinet, the Cabinet will have about 70,000 members. I have, smiling, bashful kind of an idea that when the correspondents and editors get tired of working on the Cabinet, Gen. Harrison will take hold of the matter and announce to the country the names of the men he has selected as his advisers.

Scene, hotel bar. Persons, two broken down politicians. First—"Ah, I am glad to meet you. I see that your name is mentioned in the newspapers."

Second—"Yes, I am glad to see you. I see that your name is mentioned in the newspapers."

Third—"Yes, I am glad to see you. I see that your name is mentioned in the newspapers."

Fourth—"Yes, I am glad to see you. I see that your name is mentioned in the newspapers."

Fifth—"Yes, I am glad to see you. I see that your name is mentioned in the newspapers."

the short-to-day loan me a dollar until to-morrow and we will drink to your success'. Second—"Great minds run in the same channel. I was about to make the same request of you." Loungers in the bar—"Rats."

"Wah-te-to."

THE PEARL OF THE MINNESOTA.

Chapter 6.

The night was dark and the clouds on the sky were driving before the wind, which shook the clap boards of the old and dilapidated hut which served as the Indian's resting place, but the inmate had listened to the roaring wind many a time before and under far other circumstances to be annoyed in his sleep by the pattering of the timbers or the shrieks of the storm, and lay in profound slumber wrapped in his blanket, with nothing but his weapons and faithful dog beside him.

Up and down, with leisurely tread walked the solitary guard, meditative and unconcerned, once in a while gazing abstractedly over the camp where the three score of his comrades lay in untroubled sleep, gaining strength as it were, to dream away the next day, for the duties of our garrison were not hard to fulfil and save an occasional ramble over the surrounding agency, or the arrest of a drunken red-skin who had gotten away with too much of the trader's rot gut, very little served to arouse Captain Duncan's men from their lassitude. What wonder therefore that the sentinel failed to cast critically surveying glances abroad, failed to steal cautiously around the dark corners of the magazine to inquire into the business of yonder lurking figure, which noiselessly advances step by step toward the crumbling hut where the Indian lies stretched on his blanket. A low whine of the dog first caused Ona to lift his head imperceptibly but just in time for him to notice a suddenly vanishing shadow which fitted across the open window. The Indian kept his posture quietly, his hand only stealing to grasp his rifle, but suddenly he jumped up and with a bound flew through the uncovered window, the dog at his heels. The solitary sentinel saw two fast receding figures leave the premises and heard the howl of a dog. "Halt," rang out through the rising wind, "Halt," and the loud report of a gun reechoed over the camp and roused the inmates from their slumber.

Chapter 7.

Swiftly the Indian gave pursuit to the fleeing shadow which was heading toward the ravine, and fast burying itself in the darkness of the brush and timber, which lined the edge. Intent upon reaching the latter in time to see the fugitive's direction and to follow it if possible, Ona forgot his usual vigilance and fore-thought and not till his faithful canine stopped suddenly, sniffed the air and uttered a low howl did he recognize the near presence of others. He fell flat to the ground and cautiously crawled forward on all fours, commanding his dog to be silent. Slowly he advanced, ready at any moment to encounter an enemy, and was now enveloped by the scanty brush which stretched along the ravine till it reached the primitive cemetery, where the dead soldiers found their last resting-place. Cowering down close to the ground in deepest silence, and momentarily resting, he suddenly perceived a figure rise from behind the bushes and walk hurriedly down the declivity. Had Ona followed his first impulse the report of his rifle would have disturbed the silence of night and the blanketed form now fast receding lain dead in its path, but lowering his weapon, he prepared to follow his dog which was scenting its way slowly down through the cluster of small timber and pursuing the unknown enemy.

The storm's fury did not extend down into the glen, and as Ona followed his animal but the distant and indistinct grumbings of the wind broke on his ear, and the comparative quietude around him bid the observance of utmost caution. Our hero was skilled in all the arts of war, and well knew that the solitary figure at his window, which from its manoeuvrings was evidently a squaw, had intentionally attempted to attract his attention and was endeavoring to lead him into ambush. Yet the Indian had been given such close chase by Ona as to necessitate her temporary concealment on the edge of the ravine, and had not quite been able to choose her own ways. It might still be possible however that Ona had gone into the trap and he was therefore on the alert.

Turning a curve and suddenly emerging into an open space through which a rivulet found its way, our friend came upon a deliberating group of red-skins, who were however too much engrossed in their own debate to immediately notice him. He was just about to step back behind a tree, when his dog, to which he had not paid any direct attention at this juncture, suddenly gave a yelp, just as a bullet whistled past Ona's ear and the report of a gun rang out through the silent glen. Instantly the savages in front were on a stir, and turning abruptly the Indian saw a red-skin caught at the throat by his faithful Bello.

European Sketches.

November 22nd was Reichstag opening which gave me a good opportunity of seeing the Kaiser, Windhorst, Moltke, Virchow and other leading political lights; Bismarck is still at Friedrichsruhe suffering from gout. Von Moltke although a very old man (89 years) walks with a quick, elastic step and the way he was received in the Reichstag with handshaking, everyone seeming to endeavor to speak with him, showed the esteem with which he is held by his fellow countrymen.

At the time of my arrival here the excitement over the Bergmann-Mackenzie discussion was at its height but now very little is heard regarding it. The majority of people here think that Prof. Bergmann has the best of the argument although for an outsider it is somewhat difficult to decide.

Boys are put to a very good use here in Berlin, coal, furniture and almost everything being drawn by them in light but strongly built wagons. The Berlin Zoological Garden is much larger than that of New York, contains many more animals and much better equipped. It is open every day and on Sunday the crowds visiting it are immense.

Charlottenburg is about 4 English miles from Berlin, has about 50,000 inhabitants and has many fine buildings. The Charlottenburg Cuisine and residence of the late Kaiser Friedrich is a very large building surrounded by pleasant grounds and the famous Schlossgarten in which stands the Mausoleum. In the latter are the remains of Koenig Friedrich Wilhelm III and wife as are also those of the late Kaiser Wilhelm.

Potsdam is about 16 English miles from Berlin and contains many places of interest, such as the old castle (the residence of the present Kaiser) the new palace, where the late Kaiser Friedrich died, the Friedens Kirche where he is buried, Garrison Church under the Chancel of which lie the remains of Frederick the Great and wife. It contains also places of minor interest such as the Park of San Souci, the great fountain, the orangee etc.

The weather has been very wet and disagreeable and up to date no snow has fallen. Rev. Father Bergbold at last writing was in Vienna after having made a pleasant trip through France, Spain, Switzerland, the Rhine Provinces and Southern Germany.
