Farmers In Politics.

"The new organization of the farmers," says Secretary Rusk, "are an indication of the growth of their intellectual life. They are thinking for themselves and their ideas show that they are awake and that they are studying their own interests. I am giad to see it. I think the country is to be congratulated upon the awakening interest which they have in political affairs, and I b lieve that they are, by their numbers and their peculiar position, especially well fitted to serve as a balance wheel in political matters. Extremists may be found in their ranks as in the ranks of all other classes, but in our future the capitalist will learn to trust the farmer as a mun who owns property and can never be a communist; and, on the other | but a little is enough if you hand, the laborer will never become a monopolist. I do not apprehend that farmers will ever be a political party of themselves in the United States. Their interests are wrapped up in those of church the more oysters and ice the rest of the country, and their cream it rakes to run it. success forms the foundation of the success of all classes and all honest thinking than the people by W.
