W. M. Moore was tried before United States Commissioner, J. R. Musick, Tuesday afternoon charged with retailing liquors and rectifying without license. Moore came to Lancaster about two weeks ago claiming to represent a wholesale liquor firm of Ottumwa. He sold each of the Lancaster saloons a keg of wine. After making the sales he went into the rear room of a restaurant and manufactured the wine out of chemicals that he carried with him. He was arrested and Commissioner Musick notified. He was brought here for trial Monday, and Tuesday afternoon Geo. D. Reynolds, of St. Louis, district attorney came up and prosecuted the case. Moore was found guilty of rectifying without government license, and was bound over to await the December term of Hannibal court. Failing to give bond he was sent to the Kirksville jail for safe keeping. He is a young man and claims to be single, and without any permanent home. Letters found in his possession, however, indicate that, though without a home, he has three wives.
