The Governor's Dream.

[By the Bishop of Gallatin.]
 When the celebration was over, and Sam and Bill had gone,
 The Governor went out of doors and walked about the lawn.

The day was young, the midnight hour was past,
 And he could take account of stock at last.

For he was dizzy from the flow of words
 Of Stone and Cook, the little early birds,
 Upon whose tails, unless he was at fault,
 The Governor was sure he'd sprinkled salt.

Still he was anxious. "This," he grimly said,
 "Is penance on me for my being led
 "Into the sin of making a mistake;
 "The Goldbug Gang's the one for me to shake

"Whenever time is called, and that's right now.
 "The cry is up, and that I must allow
 "They're onto me, and after me at that—
 "I'm damned if I know now just where I'm at!

"Except that I'm not where I was before,
 "And this time next week I'll have moved some more.

"For get away from Bella Wells I must;
 "I'll have to shake that Goldbug Crowd or bust.

"Bill Stone is worth a hundred of that lot
 "To fool the People. All he's ever got
 "In politics, with all its worldly dross,
 "He's made by playing up the double cross

"Unto the People he the Goldbugs damn;
 "Then to the Goldbugs, who're a lot of claim

"He sells the People, in a lawyer's plea
 "Worth little, but it brings a princely fee.

"He's the Great Commoner, and I'm the Fool
 "The Goldbug Gang have used, and made their tool.

"And now I find that they're not in the game,
 "I'll change my play, begad! I'll play the same:
 "As Stone and Cook, and share the name
 "and fame."

The Governor slept, filled with the worldly schemes
 Which pave the way for many wondrous dreams.

His doubt of Stone tinged all the dreams with fear,
 And when he met the Devil, he thought:
 "Here

"Is the man to play this game for me
 "If I can give him anything to see

"In it for him, I'll play this old short card,
 "And, win or lose, I'll play it mighty hard."

So thinking, he at once to Satan said:
 "How's Faust?" Quoth Satan: "Faust is dead."

"I know," said Duckery, "he is not on earth,
 "But, have you ever got your money's worth?"

"I think I have," said Satan, "counting fun,
 "And then my contract still has years to run."

"A man's a fool," said Duckery then, "to sell to you for love;
 "Ambition is the only thing the soul of man should move.

"I want to be a Senator, whether by hook or crook;
 "What would you do if, in a game with Cockrell, Stone and Cook?"

"I see you drift," the Devil said, "but I can't trade with you;
 "You are the worst that I have seen since little apples grew.

"The man the Francis crowd can roll, is sure a jolly thing;
 "For men like Stone and Cook to play and give the giant swing;

"And as for me, a man like that could never bed room earn;
 "He'd never start a fire for me; he is too green to burn."
