Lippincott's: Several lawyers in a Southern city were discussing the merits and demerits of a wellknown member of the bar who had been gathered to his fathers, when one of the party related an incident of the time when he had studied in the old man's office. It seems that the inefficiency of the copying clerk there kept the judge continually worked up to the point of explosion. One day a wire basket fell off the top of the clerk's desk and scratched his cheek. Not having any court-plaster, the young man slapped on three postage stamps and went to work. Later in the day he had occasion to take a certain paper to the court and forgetting all about the stamps he put on his hat to go out. At the door he met the judge, who raised his head and fixed the clerk with an astonished stare. "Anything wrong sir?" stammered the bewildered clerk. "Yes, sir, there is!" thundered the old gentleman. "You are carrying too much postage for second-class matter!"

The telegram adds that there are many victims and that help is urgently needed. The government has sent a fleet of warships, consisting of three battle ships and four cruisers, with instructions to hurry to the scene of the disaster with all provisions and food available. Troops also have been hurried to the stricken city. Word comes that it is not likely that there are any Americans among the victims of the disaster. The Paris Appeal gets off this very sensible story. "One time a negro preacher had a little negro servant by the name of Sam, and the preacher bought some butter from one of the neighbors by the name of Paul, and he bought it on credit. One Sunday morning the preacher told Sam to go over to Paul's and get a pound of butter, then he could come on to the church. Just as Sam was coming up the aisle the preacher said in the course of his sermon, "What did Paul say?" and he was looking straight at Sam. Sam thought he was talking to him and said: "He say, boss, you can't get no more butter till you pay for what you don't got."
