In Other Words, there are Clothes and Clothes.

A man remarked the other day—"I wouldn't have a suit if the material was as fine as frog's hair, if the coat collar wouldn't stay up snug."

We don't blame him---we wouldn't either.

When a coat collar pulls back and sticks out away from the neck there's something wrong.

It takes fine tailoring to put the collar snug and firm and make it stay. Some clothes makers can't do it, some don't want to pay for skilled labor to do it.

We know makers of men's clothes who know how---who want to do it---and do.
