FANNING MILLS IS HIS LINE.

A Minneapolis Salesman Has Scheme to Help Students.

D. W. Parsons, a representative of a fanning mill company of Minneapolis, was in Columbia today.

"I am in the managing department of the firm," said Mr. Parsons, "and I have a scheme on hand, which, if carried through, will give the students a chance to make their way through school, and at the same time help us. The proposition is that students will be employed to sell these mills through the summer months and give public demonstrations of them."

"The fanning mill is becoming more and more a necessity and our work is in harmony with the agricultural schools, for they teach that the seed should be fanned and we furnish the machine to fan them with. Some farmers do not know the necessity of fanning the seed, so we, with the aid of the agricultural schools, can teach them the value of fanning the seed, and in order to do this they must have one of our mills."

Mr. Parsons is a former student of Harvard University.

"I helped make my way through school by playing baseball," said Mr. Parsons, "and did not have as hard a time to make ends meet as some students have."

TWO SHORT FARMER COURSES.

Dean Mumford Announces a Change in College of Agriculture.

Changes have been made in the short winter course in agriculture. Previous to this year the course began in January and continued only six weeks. Arrangements have been made for a two-year course and two terms in a year. The first will begin November 1, and last until Christmas. The second will begin January 4, and end February 25.

"The course will be given in the New Agricultural Building for the first time," F. B. Mumford, Dean of the School of Agriculture, said this morning. "We will have seven extra instructors employed and we are broadening the course. Beginning January 4, we will give four weeks' instruction in poultry farming. We have better equipment than ever before."

UP GOES A NEW DEPOT.

Cold Weather Hasn't Stopped Work on the Wabash's Structure.

The cold weather of the last few days has not stopped work on the new Wabash depot. The walls are nearly completed and the window casings are in place. Because of the cold, however, the masons are at a disadvantage, since the tools are made mostly of steel. A feature of the depot will be the "Columbia," which will be placed in the center of the front wall. This word is cut in stone in letters eighteen inches high. The stone on which these letters are cut is in three pieces and is nearly ready to go in place. The new depot will be about 100 feet west of the old one.

PLAN FOR INSTRUCTIVE TALKS

Engineering Society Will Have Addresses by Faculty and Students.

The Engineering Society of the University of Missouri has planned to have a series of talks delivered by the faculty and the students of the School of Engineering. The first talk will be given by L. M. Defoe, professor of mechanical engineering, next Friday night. His subject will be "Cambridge." He will describe student life in England. The society is to meet every two weeks. Some of the students who have been at work over the country during the summer will give practical talks on the different lines of work they have been following.

HOW COLUMBIA HAS GROWN.

F. R. Sexton, Student in '92, Scarcely Recognizes University.

"Columbia has certainly undergone a great change in the last twelve years," said Floyd R. Sexton, a former student at the University of Missouri, who is spending several days visiting friends here. "I was a freshman in 1892, the year of the great fire. A number of University buildings were burned and we had classes in halls and stores about town. I would hardly know the present buildings."

Mr. Sexton lives at Webb City, where he is assistant cashier of a bank.

A Week's Holiday For Them.

Students in the Missouri Bible College are enjoying a one-week holiday, while the other students in the University of Missouri had only one day. The students of the Bible College get the entire week because of the absence of Dean Charles M. Sharpe and Prof. T. E. Winter, who are in Pittsburgh attending the Centennial celebration of the Christian Church.

NOT SO "WORLDLY WISE" HERE.

Instructor Contrasts M. U. Students With Those at Chicago U.

"The students here make no pretense to being worldly wise, as do the students in the University of Chicago," said E. H. Downey, a recently appointed instructor in economics in the University of Missouri, to a friend today. "Probably," he continued, "it is because the majority of them, coming from the country and small towns as they do, are somewhat unsophisticated and in my opinion they are just as well off for being so."

He contrasted further the habits of the students here and in the University of Chicago, estimating that not more than 25 per cent of the undergraduate men in the Chicago institution smoke, while a very large per cent of them drink beer.

"When a fellow is out for a lark there," he said, "he goes 'down town' rather than to any student affair. There is no class spirit as here and student activities there are for the most part very much overshadowed by the doings of the city. Just now interest is in baseball and by 9 o'clock in the evening almost every one will know the day's scores in the two big leagues."
