COLUMBIA MINES AID IN SUPPLY OF FUEL

In case of a coal shortage, Columbia would fare better than most Missouri towns in regard to fuel. Two coal mines and about fifteen coal banks are in operation within a five-mile radius. Approximately one hundred tons are dug each day. Farmers who have outcroppings of coal mine it in their spare time in the fall, but most of the coal comes from the Prather mine, four miles north of town, and the Watson & Davis mine, three and one-half miles northwest. Both mines are working at the sixty-foot level. The coal is hoisted with horses. Down below, in the ground, a labyrinth of tunnels—entry-drifts, the miners call them—shows where the coal is dug. Many of the entry-ways are nearly half a mile long, and they wind about, cross each other and run together, in a way that puzzles the sightseer.

The entry-drift is driven through the heart of the veins to provide access to the coal. At each side of the entry are "rooms," from which the coal comes. Rooms vary from twenty to fifty feet in width and from one to five feet in height, according to width and thickness of the coal layers.

The miners cannot stand, but squat or kneel or even lie on their sides where the vein has almost pinched out. Any mother who has discovered her small son keeping house in the coal bin can appreciate how black a white becomes. Both negroes and white men work together, and they cannot be told apart when they come from the shift.

Mules no bigger than burros haul the coal to the shaft. They are taken out once a week, except when the weather is cold.

Mining here is not dangerous, although care must be taken in the handling of gunpowder, and the miner must watch for slabs. He may set the powder off by striking his lamp too close or when tampering in the hole. Slabs are more dangerous, for they give little warning before falling. Rats, by leaving the room, warn the workmen when a cave-in is coming. The general settling tightens up their runways, and they become suspicious and leave. The miner likes to have rats in the room, and he often divides his dinner with them.

MISSOURIAN KNOWS MOST ABOUT PROFIT IN FARMING

The man who knows most about the subject of "How to Make the Farm Pay" in the United States is a Missourian—William J. Spillman, chief of the office of farm management in the bureau of plant industry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Mr. Spillman received his agricultural education at the University of Missouri. He was graduated from the College of Agriculture with a B. S. degree in 1886 and received his master's degree in 1890.

The work of Mr. Spillman is the subject of a personal article in the January number of the American magazine, under the title of "A Wonderful Question Answered," by Fred C. Kelly. "His province is to answer questions," Mr. Kelly writes. "He knows more than any other man in the country about 'How to Make the Farm Pay.' There may be others who know just as much as Spillman about how to run a farm in a given locality, but Spillman knows just what to do in any part of the whole United States. He could go any place at random, take charge of a farm, and make it pay a profit.

"No matter what the question is, whether it is about crop rotation, artesian wells, how to muffle a hydraulic ram or how to arrange one's fields to secure the minimum number of footsteps, or market guinea pigs, Spillman has the answer ready."

Spillman gets more mail than the President of the United States, the writer asserts. "He has a bigger acquaintance on rural free delivery routes than any man in the United States. And those who know him look on him as a sort of a helping hand society, so that he is both well and popularly known."

SPORT

The basketball squad began practice in earnest yesterday afternoon, when eleven members of the squad came back two days early to get in shape for the first game of the season Saturday night. Those who reported early from the holidays were Williams, Campbell, Shirkey, Shepard, Viner, Willets, Lucas, Wayne, Vogt, Rohloff and Church.

These men were given a stiff workout by Coach John F. Miller, and several agreed after practice that there was little teamwork between Christmas and basketball. All are in good condition, however, and are rounding into shape.

Vacation, It Seems Has Improved Playing.

Willets, who left school several days before the holidays on account of sickness, was in his best form yesterday and worked well with Viner on defense. Lucas also showed well at guard. These three men are fast and are daily improving in team play. Viner seems to have profited by a vacation, for he is playing a much improved game now.

Campbell, Shepard and Shirkey work well at forward. Campbell is playing a better game than he did before the holidays and is shifter than he was last year. Shirkey is a much surer shot this year and has gained in weight. Shepard is playing the best ball of his career, and his height and improved basket shooting makes him a strong asset to the team.

Church and Wayne have been showing great work, but neither will be eligible to play until the second semester. Vogt, who has not been out so long as the other men, is fast rounding in a strong cog in the offense. Another to shape and his shooting makes him good guard who has shown great improvement this year is Rohloff, and as soon as Orr gains a stronger offensive play he will fit in well with the team, for he is one of the best long distance shots on the squad.

Varsity Men Played Their High Schools.

Nearly every member of the basketball squad played in an alumni game against his high school while home during the holidays. Of the four high schools in Kansas City, only one was beaten by the alumni. Williams and Shirkey played on this team, and they beat Westport High, 48 to 28. Viner, Rider and "Jake" Brodie, a former Missouri basketball man, played against Central and were defeated by a close score. Willets, playing with the Manual Alumni, lost to the school five. The Odessa High School alumni team, composed mainly of Campbell, romped away with an easy victory from this year's team. Stanowski, Rohloff and Symon won from Central High School of St. Joseph.

First Game to Be With Central Saturday.

The first game of the season will be with Central College Saturday night.

Central has the strongest team in its history and has been pointing its play for the last month toward this game. The Missouri line-up for Saturday's game will depend on what the men show in this week's practice. Several combinations have been tried by Coach Miller, but he has not decided which formation is the best.

The Missouri schedule follows:
January 6, Central at Columbia;
January 12-13, Ames at Columbia;
January 19-20, Washington at Columbia;

February 6-7, Kansas at Lawrence;
February 9-10, Nebraska at Lincoln;
February 21-22, Kansas at Columbia;

March 5-6, Kansas Aggies at Columbia;
March 9-10, Washington at St. Louis.

Oregon Beats Penn U. In New Year's Game.

In the opening football game of 1917, played at Pasadena, Cal., on New Year's Day, the University of Oregon team humbled the eleven from the University of Pennsylvania by a score of 14 to 0. The Oregon bunch tied for the championship on the Pacific Coast with Dobbie's Washington eleven, while Pennsylvania is rated with the best elevens of the East, defeated only by the strong Pittsburgh team. The superior kicking of Berry, Penn's All-America fullback, gave the East-erners the advantage in the first half of the contest, but a fumble by Penn early in the third period gave Oregon a chance to show the power of its attack.
