

SCHOOL OF JOURNALISM BEGINS ITS TENTH YEAR

The School of Journalism of the University of Missouri, the oldest school of journalism in the world, which begins in September its tenth year, has graduated 149—29 women and 120 men. Of the graduates 129, or more than 85 per cent, are engaged in some phase of journalism. Excluding the young women who have given up journalism for housekeeping, the percentage is more than 90. The positions held range from reporter to managing editor, from advertising solicitor to publisher, from teacher in news-writing in high school to professor of journalism in university. About an equal number are in rural and in metropolitan journalism.

Thirty men—more than 25 per cent—are enlisted as volunteers in some branch of the United States army or navy. One is with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces in France. One graduate, Joseph E. Chasnoff, is dead.

The graduating classes increased in membership from one, the first class, in 1909, to 38, the latest, in 1917. The classes numbered, '09, 1; '10, 6; '11, 10; '12, 19; '13, 22; '14, 19; '15, 19; '16, 19; '17, 38.
