

CITY TO CLEAN UP DURING NEXT WEEK

Mayor J. E. Boggs Issues Proclamation to Mobilize Forces.

WANTS ALL TO AID

Object Is to Prevent Fires and Disease and Impress Visitors.

Next week will be "Clean-Up Week" in Columbia. Mayor Boggs made this known today through a proclamation, ordering a mobilization of all forces for a general city-wide clean-up campaign to make Columbia a city of cleanliness for the eyes of the many visitors who will come to Columbia during the next few weeks. Other objects are to eliminate insanitary places and to keep down fire risks.

The proclamation follows:

In order that this city may be cleaned up and cleared of rubbish and other accumulations of unhealthy and unsightly matter, and believing this can be done in a better and more effective manner by the combined efforts of all the citizens of Columbia, I hereby designate the week of May 13th to May 18th, 1918, as "Clean-Up and Paint-Up Week" for Columbia.

During this week, every citizen of Columbia is urged to make an effort to clean up his premises so as to avoid fire risk, to abolish insanitary places which breed flies and mosquitoes, to eliminate weeds, and to do all in his power to remove all causes which might make his premises unsafe, unhealthy and unsightly.

Nothing gives the many strangers who visit Columbia a better impression of our city than well kept lawns and parkings and clean alleys and streets. Clean premises keep down the fire risk and are the best preventives of disease.

Let us unite in making Columbia a clean, wholesome city.

Given under my hand this 10th day of May, 1918.

JAMES E. BOGGS

WAR ADDS TO PROBLEMS OF HIGH SCHOOL TEACHING

"The war in which our country is now engaged has created new problems in every phase of our national life and activities. This is no less true in our schools than in any of the other institutions," said Uel W. Lamkin, state superintendent of public schools, when asked about special problems of high school teachers for the coming year.

There are a number of problems which have arisen for the high school teachers. However, he discusses only what he considers the two most important ones.

The first problem he says is to secure thorough work from the pupils in spite of distractions which may be caused by the various war activities.

"The public schools and in particular the high schools are taking a very active part in the different war activities and 'drives.' This is proper and is as it should be. However, teachers should not lose sight of the fact that the prime function of the high school is to impart education to the students.

"The students," he continues, "should be made to see that one of the best ways to help the country and the cause is for every person to do his best in whatever position or work he is employed. In other words, one of the best services the high school student can render his country, is to make exceptional efforts to secure a thorough education, preparing himself thereby to be a more efficient citizen for the coming years which will be full of new problems and responsibilities as results of the war."

The idea which he wishes to present is that students should take an active part in all the war activities for which an opportunity is offered. At the same time, however, such activities should represent additional efforts and should not detract in the least from thorough class work. To make any of the war activities an excuse for inferior work or for neglect of daily preparation would be the worst form of "profiteering." The country calls for additional efforts from students but does not ask them to neglect their highest duty, that of getting a thorough training for citizenship by securing a solid education.

"Better work than ever" should be the motto of every high school pupil and all "profiteering" should be frowned upon as unpatriotic," he says.

The second problem which he discusses is of a more general nature and more difficult of solution. The problem is nothing less than to secure for the students the moral values from the war. It is difficult to express just what this means.

"This war is and should be," he says, "a war for principles for the American people."

The questions which arise, therefore, for the high school teachers are: "Do the pupils of the high school understand the real significance of the war?" "What meaning has the term Democracy to the students?" "What are the fundamental principles of Democracy?" "What are the duties of a citizen in a Democracy?" "How would a German victory be a disaster to the democracies of the world?" "What is international law?" "What is honor among nations?"

He says, "It would be deplorable if the youth of our country would merely cultivate a blind, unreasoning hate for the enemy or perhaps for a personality like the Kaiser. The pupil should learn to hate the principles, the things which autocracy stands for and should learn to honor and love the principles which the term Democracy includes.

"From the war the students should secure a deeper devotion to everything that is good and true. A spirit of consecration should permeate the youth in our schools; a consecration vitalized through knowledge of the deep, true, moral significance of the war."
