CHANGE IN FACE AND FORM

Some changes in the Missouriian's appearance will be observed by the readers.

One change is its name. While the word Missouriian remains, as from the first issue the name by which the newspaper is generally known here is now added to it the word Columbia to denote the place of publication and the word Evening to denote the time and frequency of issue.

The size and number of pages constitutes another and important change. The Missouriian has heretofore been six columns to the page with an occasional daily issue of four pages. The new form is eight columns to the page and from six to eight pages will be published each day. While supplying laboratory output for a larger number of Journalism students this increased size will give to the readers the largest daily newspaper ever regularly published in Columbia.

A third change is in the type used. The body type or "dressed" of the new Missouriian has been selected with special reference to its clearness and beauty. It is Bodoni, a face of type designed by a famous Italian printer of the eighteenth century of whom more may be said at another time—and readily read to meet the demand for a newspaper type which should be legible, artistic and distinctive.

None of these changes will affect the policy and purpose of the Missouriian. They will, however, give larger opportunity to accomplish the purpose for which it is maintained and to carry out in broader lines its policy of public service.

From H. C. Rotling, executive secretary of the National Editorial Association, St. Paul, Minn.:

There was never a period in the world's history when it was more important that we have trained Journalists—newspaper men with broad vision, with high ideals, prepared to do their part in lifting men and nations to a true and higher understanding of their responsibilities to one another and determined to restore order from the chaotic conditions which have followed the war. For that reason I am pleased that the Missouri School of Journalism, the leader in this field of endeavor, is maintaining its vantage ground by adding the Jay H. Neff Hall, dedicated to the memory of a pioneer in farm journalism, guided by intelligence and directed by educated hand and brain will contribute more than any other force in restoring order in the world. It will restore sanity and enthuse reason. The call of the hour is for men who will measure up to a new standard, a standard of service that will give us honest leadership and higher conceptions of brotherhood.

Believing your school is preparing just that sort of journalists, the National Editorial Association congratulates Missouri and its School of Journalism on the acquisition of the new and significant equipment.

GROWING!

CONGRATULATIONS STILL COME TO M. U. SCHOOL

From Robert W. Jones, graduate of the University, now a member of the faculty in the department of the University of Washington.

As one who saw the first opening of the School of Journalism, I know the pleasure that must be yours today in the dedication of Neff Hall. My best wishes on this happy day and the hope that the school may continue to prosper and grow.

E. T. McElbeth, journalist, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, says in his telegram:

I regret it will be impossible for me to visit Columbia in time to participate in the dedication of Jay H. Neff Hall. A assure you it would give me much pleasure to join with you in dedicating a memorial to the public service of a distinguished journalist, a memorial which will stand also as a fitting recognition to the profession of journalism. I congratulate the University of Missouri on the larger opportunity now presented to train young men and women for journalism and through journalism for public service.

From Arthur R. Ford, secretary of the Press Congress of the Dominion Press Co., Canada, comes the following:

I can't be with you for the opening of the new building tomorrow. I congratulate you on the achievement and on behalf of the future of greater success than in the past.

This telegram comes from Jay L. Torrey, chairman of the Board of Visitors of the University:

From Joseph Daniels, newspaper owner, Secretary of the Navy:

I am sure your new building will be dedicated to the spirit of journalism which places emphasis upon personal responsibility. We need to hark back to the days when every man who wrote for our newspaper felt that he had the message which he must deliver and back of that conscience as well as his intellect.

Journalistic influence is in proportion to the journalistic conscience and journalistic responsibility.

From T. R. Williams of the American Newspaper Publishers Association:

I am glad to take this opportunity to extend, through you, to the School of Journalism cordial felicitations and good wishes of the American Newspaper Publishers Association upon the dedication of another new building. University training for newspaper work has long since passed the experimental stages and publishers everywhere, I believe, are coming more and more to look toward the schools of journalism for young men and women with trained minds for service in the editorial and news departments.

Charles Phelps Colburn, author, who was formerly on his staff of the Kansas City Star, Colliers Weekly and other eastern magazines wires as follows:

I congratulate you heartily on what the occasion means, for ever since I wrote what I believe was the first magazine article printed in a national publication on the West's first school of journalism, I've been thoroughly sold on the excellence of the institution. I think you folks have just the right combination of the idealistic and the practical. You give the student a perspective; you teach him that nothing will succeed without elbow grease. The newspaper you print is proof enough that you know what you are talking about. A laboratory demonstration!

John Ward, newspaper owner of New
