WRITERS' GUILD TO HOLD OUTING

Gascondy, in Osage County, Selected for Annual Outing of Missouri Authors.

NO PROGRAM PLANNED

Bonfires, Swimming Parties and Fishing Excursions to Give Chance for Friendships.

Gascondy, in Osage County, has been selected as the favored spot for the bonfires, swimming parties and fishing excursions more or less characteristic of the annual outing of the Missouri Writers' Guild, which will be held this year from October 2 to 9.

The outing means more intimate association and friendship among the members of the guild than any business meeting could afford.

Any Missourian who has sold three articles or stories to magazines of general circulation, or has had a book of literary nature published on a royalty basis, or has written a play that has been produced by a regular theatrical company, is eligible to active membership.

The purpose of the guild is to draw together the writers of the state for inspiration, information, and amusement, and to entertain distinguished writers and editors from other states.

Several states have similar organizations, some of them including editors in their membership. The Missouri Writers' Guild was organized in 1915 with William H. Hamby, now of San Diego, Cal., as its president.

U. S. NUMBERS HIGH SCHOOLS BY THE CLOCK

Reports Say One Every 24 Hours Is Now Being Established.

MORE GIRLS GRADUATED

California Has More in Class Rooms Than Other States.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—New high schools are being established in the United States at the rate of one every twenty-four hours.

For the last twenty-eight years the United States has maintained this record breaking clip in educational construction, the number of high schools having increased 452 per cent since 1890 to a present total of nearly 17,000.

These and other figures on the state of our nation's high schools were made public today in a report by the United States Bureau of Education.

In 1890 only 60 per cent of American high schools were public schools. Today 87 per cent are public schools according to the report.

The 13,591 public high schools of the country have enrolled an "army" of 1,735,619 students. In these students were stationed at three-foot intervals a line would be formed from Washington, D. C. to Kansas City, and it would take a high-school inspector walking at the rate of 3 miles an hour 41 days to review this "army."

In 1890 but 21,882 students were graduated. In 1918, 224,367 students received diplomas. Girl graduates, now as then, exceed the number of boys.

The American high-school army of more than 1,700,000 is taught by a total faculty of 81,034 teachers. In 1890 there were but 9,120 high-school teachers. A feature of the recent educational development, the report points out, is the increasing dominance of women in the high-school field.

More than one-tenth of the inhabitants of the United States have had or are having a high-school education. Five times as great a proportion of American youth are now in high-school class rooms as there were in 1900.

THE MESSAGES OF ARTISTS

Dr. John Pickard Lectures on Exhibition in University Library.

"The things of the spirit are the things that really count," said Dr. John Pickard, professor of the history of art, in a lecture on "The Things of the Spirit" given in the faculty room of the University Library last night.

"These are the things of the spirit, things which do not pertain to the earning of one's daily bread but to the higher life," he said. "Every race we visit has a different spirit, a different story to hand down. Not only every nation makes its own art in its own way, but every artist makes his own art in his own way."

Doctor Pickard urged the students present not to neglect the artistic side of their education while specializing in more technical subjects.

Every artist has a message and if he is a great artist he has a message that is worth while. If you are able to get his message life will be more worth while for you."
