BOBBED HAIR IN FAVOR AT BARNWARMING

Miss Henrietta Stewart is Crowned 1920 Harvest Queen by Dean F. B. Mumford.

DECLARES FOR HARDING

Tells 900 Overlaid and Gingham Subjects That She Favors Republican Nominee.

Henrietta Stewart, the 1920 Harvest Queen, wore her hair in the bobbed manner. Her dress was of field blue gingham, tied with a blue and white sash in a big bow. Therefore, bobbed hair and blue gingham was in favor at the 1920 Barnwarming of the College of Agriculture, which was held in Roswell Gymnasium from five minutes after the closing of the mass meeting at the University Auditorium last night until eleven minutes after 1 o'clock this morning. "I'm for Harding," announced the newly-crowned queen to her court, which was meeting in the southwest corner of the Barn between the second and third dances. "I feel like a million and you can hardly hold me." Then, as if she had found a use for her royal power, "It may help if I tell everyone you I'm for, for President." Proving that her course in Home Economics has taught her other things besides how to keep house and make her own coronation dress. "She talks like a real queen," said a Pig-tail to an Overall.

DOWN THE CRUTES THEY WENT. At 8:35 o'clock the Overall (most of them were a washed-blue this year) and the Bobbed Hair and the Pigtails began walking around the rear of the Barn toward the mammoth bed of coals where waffles, apples, marshmallows and Barnwarming conversation were being served by the early comers as they sat around the open fire on bales of straw.

At 8:40 o'clock the four hundred and fifty Pigtails and Bobbed Hair, clad in blue and white and calico and rags and tags and overalls and sunbonnets were giving little shrills of excitement as they prepared to slide the crates into the basement of the Barn. All of them landed in the piles of hay at the bottom without casualties. Through a subterranean woodland, such as is found nowhere in nature save at the Barnwarming, the Overalls and the Potential Patches made their way to a stair case of straw up it, onto the dance floor of the Barn.

No music. The canopy of frost-tinged leaves hung motionless above the heads of the Pigtails and their partners. In the loft at the north end of the barn at the orchestra, clad in brand new overalls, the lights, sheathed in corn husks, dimmed and brightened. The jars of cider had few admirers this early. Down at the south end of the Barn the crowd was packed around the foot of the dias and empty throne.

At 8:45 o'clock Dean F. B. Mumford stood at the west approach to the throne; Queen Elect Henrietta at center. At her elbow her consort, Charles Brown, who perched last minute importances into her bobbed hair and reminded her that he had the first dance. "Bill" Angle, president of the Ag Club, jumped up to the second step of the dias, blew his whistle and announced the election of the soon-to-be-crowned ruler. The Pigtails, Bobbed Hair and Overalls opened their mouths and cheered earnestly. "Bill" Angle stepped down. The coronation began.

THE QUEEN UPON THE THRONE. From the east came the uncrowned queen, clambering up the steps of straw to the chair of yellow and red corn. From the west came Dean Mumford. The queen sat upon the throne. The dean made a little speech to the effect that popes used to crown Harvest Queen but that, lately, deans were more in favor. He put the crown of flowers, berries and leaves upon the Queen's dark hair, a flashlight glared, nine hundred Barnwarmers jumped with nervousness, the queen unsettled her crown, re-arranged it comfortably, smiled sincerely and with dazzling effect right at the spotlight—then the orchestra rose to demand attention. They pushed air through their horns in the "I'm a Son of Old Mizou" tune; the Dean helped the Queen down the front steps of her throne, the grand march from the south end of the barn to the north end of the barn was on. Queen Henrietta's nine hundred overlaid and gingham subjects swirled into line behind her.

All the lights were on. The orchestra itself interrupted the song about Mizou. The trombone member put up a Number One on the edge of the left. His brothers of the bars took a breath; the Pigtails, Bobbed Hair and Overalls took a breath, individually and collectively. THEY LISTEN! 1:30 A. M. A moment later one of the two 'ponsums which had been put to sleep in the branches of the sapling at the center woke up and fell to the floor. Those who witnessed the accident are reported to have said that it was the orchestra. Someone put the 'possum back to sleep in the tree. The first dance went on without a murmur above the singing of the horns, the singing of the fiddle, the staccato strumming of the open-face piano and the accelerated booming of the drum—play the shuffling to three hundred pairs of feet upon the slickening floor. Counting out for dinner, adding in moonlight dances, the abandoned shoe-dusting of David Fette and his jiggers, the stories and impersonations of "Bottles" Burns, the dance lasted a short time longer, or until the moon was a mile above the Barn and the clocks said "half-past one," when the Pigtails and the Bobbed Hair and the Overalls went home yawning in their faces.
